There is no more intense feeling of vulnerability than over the Yamim Noraim – The Days of Awe. The very name conjures up trepidation for the Great Days of Judgement, when the world in general, and our lives in particular, hang in the balance. The image is powerfully captured in the Mishna that says every creature passes before G-d to be judged, one at a time, and humanity’s fate is determined over these days.1

This sense of vulnerability is particularly acute this year, as we embark on 5781. Each of us continues to experience the unthinkable reality of how a tiny microscopic virus has wreaked such havoc in almost every single corner of the earth. Over the last 10 months, this invisible foe has infected 30 million people and caused almost one million deaths, with over 1,000 in Israel, particularly affecting the elderly and infirm. Waves of widespread sickness continue and the situation seems far from under control. COVID has profoundly altered our religious, social, financial and communal lives and an inescapable feeling of vulnerability hangs over us almost every day.

Vulnerability is linked to a lack of control. When we think we are in control of our lives, we feel things are stable, predictable and permanent. The moment we lose control, we begin to feel the uneasy sense of instability, unpredictability and transience. We are now vulnerable. Things can change for the worse in a moment and life, G-d forbid, can cease in an instant.

The author of the haunting Unetaneh Tokef prayer captures this sense of human transience and vulnerability with some powerful imagery: “like a broken shard, like dried grass, like a faded flower, like a fleeting shadow, like a passing cloud, like a breath of wind, like whirling dust, like a dream that slips away.” All these images describe the tenuous fabric of the human condition. Grass, flowers, shadows, clouds, dust... all are susceptible to external elements that can dry them up, blow them away or make them disappear in the blink of an eye. Their predicament is volatile and unstable and their similarity to our own fragility is strikingly all too close.

Because the stark truth is that the vicissitudes of life guarantee we will ...profoundly encounter this existential reality at different times in our lives.

The festivals of the month of Tishrei offer a strong spiritual response to this unavoidable vulnerability. Yes, we do have an inevitable fear and concern, awe and trepidation over the Yamim Noraim – we are being judged and our fate is being decided.

But this is only part of the story.

When we fully accept our vulnerability and life’s fleetingness – and embrace them – an amazing transformation occurs. We are able to celebrate them. This is precisely the point of the immediate transition from the Days of Awe to the days of unbridled celebration on Sukkot.

No, our vulnerable state has not miraculously vanished within the space of four days. What has changed is our attitude. Having accepted vulnerability as an unavoidable reality, we are now ready to embrace and even celebrate it.

Acceptance and submission are the gateways to transformation. We are now open to the power of Faith.

In our unpredictable and transient world, there is one immutable constant – G-d. It is our unshakeable faith that everything is somehow ultimately for the good. There is Providence in unpredictability and purpose in seeming chaos. This allows us to transform our perspective and trust that the Almighty knows what He is doing.

Such is the transcendent power of faith and belief. It is for this very reason the Zohar calls the sukkah “tzila demehimenuta,” the shadow (or shade) of faith. Nothing is more temporary and transient than a shadow. It has no existence of its own and can disappear in a moment. Nevertheless, our temporary sukkah is the shadow cast by the most permanent reality of life – G-d, the Creator and Sustainer of all Life. When we understand we live in His shadow and all that happens is somehow a reflection of the purposeful plan of Providence – whether we understand it or not – we are ready to transform.

So as we begin the new year, still very much in the throes of the old, we can change. With our belief that everything is ultimately for the good, we can begin to celebrate the gift of life. We can cultivate peace of mind and faith-based serenity in our unpredictable, vulnerable world.

Wishing everyone a Chag Sameach and a healthy, happy and joyous 5781.

What We Celebrate

Zman Simchateinu

Although there is a mitzvah of simcha on all Yamim Tovim, only Sukkot is described as עָצַם שִׂמְחָה. This is because there of the Torah’s four Yom Tov-related mentions of simcha refer to Sukkot. The famous words רֵאֵשׁ הָעַשֶּׁרֶת וּרְחֵם אָדָם refer specifically to Chag HaSukkot.

The simplest explanation of the Sukkot simcha is that we are celebrating a successful harvest. This is why Sukkot is also called simcha, the harvest festival.

Lifnei Hashem – Before G-d

The Rambam points out that our celebration of a successful harvest is similar to that of other cultures. However, ours differs in its focus – on the Beit HaMikdash. The Torah mandates this with the words שָׂמַחְתָּ בְּחַגֶּךָ וְהָיִיתָ אַךְ שָׂמֵחַ (Vayikra 23:40). This is also why Sukkot is described as Chag Hashem.

We celebrate lifnei Hashem because we realize He is the cause of our success. Much like the mitzvah of bringing bikkurim, on Sukkot we use products of the harvest to praise and thank Him for our success. We recount how Hashem cared for us in the desert and realize that He continues to do so.

Simchat Beit HaShoeva – Celebrating the Water Libation

The focus of the Beit HaMikdash simcha was the Simchat Beit HaShoeva. Throughout each night we would celebrate the water we had just drawn (shoeva) from the Shiloach spring before pouring it on the mizbeach the next morning. This simcha was so special that Chazal describe it as qualitatively greater than any other. Why was this ritual (not mentioned explicitly by the Torah) the center of the celebration and even celebrated at all? At the end of the summer (with the springs at their low point) we pour water as a tefilla to Hashem to provide us with more. Why would this be the focus of or even a reason for simcha?

A Deeper Level Of Simcha

The focus on the Simchat Beit HaShoeva expresses a deeper level of the simcha. We are happy not only because of our success but also because of our realization that Hashem cares and provides for us. Most people celebrate their success but have no real reason to assume that it will continue. Because we know that our success signifies the strength of our relationship with Hashem, we are confident that success will continue.

When we pour our precious water on the Miktash’s mizbeach we are like Eliyahu HaNavi at Har HaCarmel who poured four large jugs of their last remaining water (after years of drought) on Hashem’s mizbeach. We express this confidence by not only pouring the last of our water but by also celebrating when we do so. We reflect on our success of the past year, appreciate where it emanates from, thank and praise Hashem for it, and celebrate the fact we are confident moving forward. Like Eliyahu HaNavi whose actions and tefillot at Har HaCarmel were answered with rain, our proper celebration and show of faith make us worthy of receiving rain and Hashem’s other berachot.

This year is one in which we can easily focus on what we are missing and unhappy about. It is critical we use Chag HaSukkot to focus upon and celebrate all of Hashem’s blessings (that we often take for granted). May this celebration help strengthen our confidence and merit us continued good health, happiness and hatzlacha in the coming year.

3 Vayikra 23:39. See also Sefer HaChinuch 324. Chazal also link the celebration to our having received Hashem’s forgiveness during the first part of the month of Tishrei (See Midrash Tehillim 102. Sukkah 53a, Vayikra Rabbah Emor 30).
4 Shemot 23:16.
5 Moreh Nevuchim 3:43.
6 This verse is the basis for the fact that the Four Species are taken seven full days only in the Beit HaMikdash (Mishnah Sukkah 41a). See Rambam, Sefer HaMitzvot, Asei 169, who connects the taking of the arba minim to the simcha of Sukkot.
7 Vayikra 23:39. See also Devarim 16:15.
8 Note the parallel between the verses that describe the simcha of Sukkot with the arba minim (Vayikra 23:40) and those that describe the bringing of bikkurim (Devarim 26:2,11).
9 This is why we take the arba minim during and integrate them within Hallel.

For many months now, Covid-19 has disrupted our civilization. The whole of humanity has found itself contending with a common threat to life as we know it, and it behooves us to re-explore universal messages of our past in the Torah and the words of the Prophets.

As we open the Tanach, we find numerous precedents for plagues and pandemics that have stricken either the Jewish people and/or specific nations, ranging from plagues in Egypt though pandemic punishments in the wilderness. Both the Plishtim and people of Yehuda suffer pandemics due to improper interaction with the Aron Kodesh, and David HaMel ech faces national disease after conducting a census. However, there is only one מַגֵּפָה (plague) mentioned in Tanach with parallel global ramifications and fatalities – and we read its messages on the first day of Sukkot!

Sukkot is celebrated as a holiday of nature, as we enjoy our harvest through the Four Species and dwell in sukka (Ibn Ezra, Vayikra 23:43). Yet Chazal teach us to simultaneously recognize Hashem’s miraculous supervision, in the form of the Clouds of Glory that sheltered us in the wilderness.1

The haftarah on the first day of Sukkot revisits these existential themes as we hear Zecharia’s eschatological prophecy (chapter 14). He sought to encourage the minority Jewish population of Shivat Tzion to regain sovereignty in the Land of Israel. He begins his prophecy by describing how HaKadosh Baruch Hu will fight against foreign nations in Yerushalayim (reminiscent of the Six-Day War):

For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle, and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished, and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, but the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall Hashem go forth, and fight against those nations, as when He fights in the day of battle (Zecharia 14:2-3).

The climax, however, will be a global plague that will not be overcome through natural means and will elicit a recognition of Hashem’s powers.

He continues to detail miraculous changes in the political and natural realms as victory will ensue and Yerushalayim will be safe. The climax, however, will be a global plague that will not be overcome through natural means and will elicit a recognition of Hashem’s powers. Zecharia then notes that those nations that survive this cataclysmic war will be required to go to Yerushalayim every year on Sukkot to pay homage to G-d.

The message of the pandemic is to teach the world that rules of nature may change. Even “super-power” countries must recognize Hashem’s kingship. Countries such as Egypt, who depend on the Nile River for water, must learn that Hashem controls natural and supernatural forces, and has the ability to stop the most natural phenomenon of rainfall!

Zecharia concludes his vision with a poignant description of horses and pots – symbols of man’s efforts to control natural forces through warfare and cooking, which will be transformed into sacred objects dedicated to Hashem’s Mikdash. Even household pots will be treated as holy as we recognize Divine immanence in every aspect of our lives!

Sukkot is the time to relay this message to the global community. Hashem controls agricultural-natural forces and provides us with seasonal huts. On Sukkot we are meant to recognize and internalize mankind’s vulnerabilities and Hashem’s omniscient powers – which extend beyond the natural – providing us with Clouds of Glory and miraculously-supervised rainfall in Israel and throughout the world.

Perhaps if we do that this COVID-affected Sukkot, then together with the global community, we will merit And the L-rd shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall the L-rd be One, and His name one (ibid. v.9).

The Beauty of the Arava

In his book Like Dreamers, Yossi Klein Halevi tells the stories of IDF paratroopers involved in reuniting Jerusalem during the Six-Day War. One of those soldiers was Yoel bin Nun. Rabbi bin Nun was a founder of the settlement movement in Israel, including Alon Shvut and Ofra. He led a generation of Religious Zionists to study Tanach as a way of understanding contemporary Israel.

The young Yoel was learning at Yeshivat Merkaz HaRav, led at that time by Rav Kook’s son, Rav Tzvi Yehuda. One day, Yoel was accompanying Rav Tzvi Yehuda through the streets of Geula when they came across a campaign rally for a Charedi political party. An activist was addressing a crowd of black-hatted men, whom he kept addressing as “the community of holy etrogim.”

There is a well-known Midrash that compares the Four Species to four types of Jews. The etrog, having both taste and fragrance, is compared to righteous Jews who possess both Torah knowledge and good deeds. The speaker was praising the assembled as “the community of holy etrogim.” Upon hearing this, Rav Tzvi Yehuda tightened his grip on Yoel’s arm and said emphatically, “The mizbeach was not wrapped in etrogim.”

Rav Yoel did not hear his Rebbe at first. Rav Tzvi Yehuda began pulling Yoel away from the area as if he wanted to get away. “The altar was not wrapped in etrogim,” Rav Tzvi Yehuda repeated. “The altar was wrapped in aravot.”

Rav Kook was referencing another way aravot were used, as described in the Talmud Sukkah 45a:

“There was a place below Jerusalem, and it was called Motza. They would go down and gather branches of aravot, and come and put them on the sides of the altar, and their tops would be bent over the altar.”

“As Sukkot came to a close and people left the Temple, they would turn to the altar, adorned with the arava, for the last time, and proclaim, יָפִי לְךָ, מִזְבֵּחַ; יָפִי מקְבוֹסָה: יָפִי לְךָ, מִזְבֵּחַ – how beautiful the altar is, how beautiful the aravot were.”

In what way is the arava beautiful? By itself, there is nothing eye-catching about it. Its hadar, its beauty, is displayed when put together with the lulav and hadassim. The simple green leaves create an aesthetic look in context with the other minim. The aravot help create a pleasing and striking overall effect.

Similarly, when adorning the mizbeach, there is no need to use objects that are beautiful or impressive in their own right. The altar itself was a work of art. What are needed are some accents to create an overall pleasing effect. The aravot must not draw attention away from the altar but rather add a splash of green to the picture. Flower bouquets are that much more beautiful when combined with the simplicity of some green foliage – such is the beauty of the arava.

The beauty of the arava is found in the way it complements through its dependence on and interaction with other items. The arava is the neediest of the four minim. It is the most water-dependent. Its dependence is manifest not only in its appearance but also in its biology. This helps to explain why the arava plays a major role in our prayers for rain, as our water needs are a good example of our dependence on G-d.

The word arava is related to the Hebrew word for mixture, ערב, ערב. Due to its own simplicity, the willow must constantly mix with others; whether with the other minim or with the mizbeach, to fully contribute and be fully appreciated.

An arava is also a geographic location, a plateau, one difficult to access and not useful in its own right, but useful as an artery connecting different places.

The arava benefits others without needing to be in the limelight. Its combination of humility and benevolence – contributing to others without being the focus of attention – is truly beautiful. The arava is our Jewish symbol of the beauty of servant leadership.

Traditional leadership often involves the accumulation and exercise of power by one at the “top of the pyramid.” By comparison, the servant-leader shares power, puts the needs of others first and helps people develop and perform to the best of their abilities.

Making others look good while worrying less about oneself. This is servant leadership and this is the lesson of the arava. How beautiful is the arava indeed!

Sukkot on Shabbat in the Kovno Ghetto

This year, the first day of Sukkot falls on Shabbat, as it did in 1943. In his Holocaust responsa, Rabbi Ephraim Oshri tells the following story: Sukkot was approaching and no-one in the ghetto had arba minim. Not only were they distraught but they were also afraid they may never shake a * lulav* again.

Suddenly, a Jew appeared with a set of arba minim! He had come from Vilna on business but the Germans would not allow him to stay for the second day. He had to return to Vilna immediately after Shabbat. The Jews in the ghetto were worried they’d miss out on the mitzvah so they asked Rabbi Oshri if in those circumstances they could bench * lulav* on Shabbat.

The Gemara (Sukkah 42b) says that although the Torah indicates we should take the arba minim even when the first yom tov falls on Shabbat, Chazal decreed not to, in case a person may step outside the boundaries of the eruv. However, in the Kovno Ghetto, there was no chance of that because it was hermetically sealed – “No-one was allowed in or out and it was bordered by an electric barbed wire fence guarded by German soldiers.”

Perhaps in this context, when there is no chance of carrying something in a public domain, there is no rabbinic prohibition of taking the arba minim, and if the mitzvah was not uprooted, one would be able to take them.

Although Rav Oshri cited various arguments permitting taking arba minim on Shabbat, he didn’t rule in favor of any particular position:

“I did not want to rule in this matter — neither prohibit nor allow, and since I did not rule it was forbidden, they understood themselves that one who does bench * lulav* will not lose out.”

He then relates that many Jews did indeed make the * beracha* over the * arba minin* and even said “Shechechiyanu.” He adds that Reb Feivel Zissman said he would observe the mitzvah without asking any questions: “I am ready to accept Gehinnom for observing this mitzvah, because all my life I spent a fortune on buying beautiful etrogim, and now — perhaps before my death — I know that observing this mitzvah will be a merit in my favor on the Day of Judgement.”

At the same time, the Gadol HaDor, Rabbi Avraham DovBer Kahana-Shapira, was also in the ghetto. He was sick and in no state to respond to such a question in real time. However, he felt better during the holiday and Rav Oshri asked him what he would have responded. He replied, “Chazal did not talk about a reality in which people are imprisoned and in perpetual fear of their lives.”

This year, we will also be celebrating Sukkot on Shabbat and we have the fortune to be free people in our own Land. Yes, we are experiencing a pandemic but that pales in the face of everything we have suffered throughout our history.

We pray the pandemic ends soon, that the world will be a better and purer place, and that B’Ezrat Hashem we ourselves will be able to do good deeds, sit in the sukkah and joyously take the * arba minim*, relishing all the good G-d has given us and using that good to make a difference to the world around us.

The Universality of the Festival of Sukkot

In Zecharia’s prophecy (14), he describes a day when the Kingship of Hashem is revealed to the entire world. As a result, there is great turmoil in the world: G-d wages war against the nations, there is a great earthquake, a spring bursts forth from Jerusalem to the Dead Sea and there is a total eclipse of the celestial luminaries. The end result of this tremendous upheaval is, “And G-d shall become King over all the earth; on that day the L-rd shall be one, and His name one” (14:9). One of the expressions of G-d’s Kingship in the world is that all the nations of the world will also acknowledge and accept Him and they will all come to worship Him in Jerusalem.

“And it will come to pass, that everyone who is left of the nations who came up against Jerusalem, will go up every year to prostrate themselves to the King, the L-rd shall be one, and His name one” (14:9). One of the expressions of G-d’s Kingship in the world is that all the nations of the world will also acknowledge and accept Him and they will all come to worship Him in Jerusalem.

The Malbim states that “The Downfall of Gog will be on the festival of Sukkot, and they shall all go up to Jerusalem to celebrate the festival, as a commemoration of the miracle that occurred on that day.”

According to this, it is precisely the great downfall of the gentiles/enemies of Israel in war that will bring those who are left to the understanding that G-d is King. Therefore, they must celebrate on that very day they come to this understanding and revelation. However, it would seem there is a deeper meaning to the celebration of Sukkot, beyond commemorating the date of the war.

At the inauguration of the First Beit HaMikdash, on Sukkot, Shlomo designated it as a place of prayer for all of the nations, not just Am Yisrael (Melachim I 8:41-43). It appears it is no coincidence that both Shlomo and Zecharia designated the Beit HaMikdash for a universal purpose, which specifically revolves around the festival of Sukkot.

It is interesting to note that the mitzvot connected to Sukkot do possess a universal element and meaning:

The Four Species represent the prayer for rain, which is a basic, existential need for the entire world, not only for Am Yisrael.

The korbanot of the holiday are different from all the other festivals. On Sukkot, there are a total of 70 offerings, symbolizing the 70 nations of the world. As the Talmud states (Sukkah 55b): “Rabbi Elazar said: These 70 bulls to what do they correspond? They correspond to the 70 nations.” Rashi explains there: “There are 70 bulls corresponding to the 70 nations of the world in order to atone for them, so that rain will fall in the whole world, for we are judged regarding rainfall on the festival of Sukkot.”

Sitting in the sukkah symbolizes impermanence, vulnerability, and simplicity, and thus can unite all human beings around one common denominator. During most of the year, one is locked up in one’s own home, disconnected from others and wrapped up in one’s own definitions, impressions and sense of security. The walls, partitions, defenses, definitions and stereotypes, prevent people from connecting with one another. So too, the feelings of haughtiness and abundance obstruct G-d’s Kingship in the world and cause divisiveness among people.

On Sukkot, everyone goes outside, and all are equal in their humble dwelling. As such, everyone can feel G-d’s Providence, and a sense of equality with their fellow. It is precisely in this reality that people are able to make room for one another in their hearts, and for G-d’s presence among them. Humility, simplicity, vulnerability and the feeling of impermanence allow people to connect, as well as allowing for G-d’s Kingship to be felt.

The festival of Sukkot is a holiday when we pray for all of the world’s existential needs. It is a time we all unite under the banner of humility and simplicity, a time we realize just how small we are compared to the Creator of the Universe. Sukkot is a festival in which it becomes possible for everyone on earth to unite in serving G-d.

Survival of the Weakest

I used to get frustrated each year when, on the last few days of Sukkot, I noticed how quickly the arava leaves lost their vitality, shriveled up and died. In my attempts to keep them fresh like the beautiful hadas branches, I kept them rolled up in a wet towel in the fridge, standing in a bucket of fresh water, even tucked away inside the freezer – but to no avail. Nothing seemed to really work. Recently, however, I have changed the way I look at those pale-green dried leaves. Here’s why.

At first glance, the arava is indeed the least impressive of the Four Species. According to our Sages, the arava is the least worthy when compared to the etrog, lulav and hadas. It has some value only if bound together with the other species, which are of higher importance and can therefore atone for it. How surprising it is, therefore, to find two Sukkot practices focusing on the arava alone:

a) the Murbiyot, the long arava branches – 5.5 meters tall – picked by a river outside Jerusalem and erected at the four corners of the altar in the courtyard of the Temple throughout the seven days of Sukkot, with their ends bent onto the top of the altar (Mishnah Sukkah 4:5), and b) the Chavata, the five aravot we tie together and beat on the floor in shul at the end of the Hoshanot on Hoshana Rabbah, a custom originated by the early Prophets (Rambam, Lulav 7:24).

So here is a fresh look at the arava: Sukkot is known as the “Judgement Day for Rain” (Mishnah Rosh Hashanah 1:2), and the arava, whose leaves are the fastest to dry once removed from a water source, is the most fitting tree through which to show our absolute dependence on rain, our primordial fear of famine and our inherent thirst for water – all of which are strongly felt in a desert land like Israel.

The Murbiyot branches of the arava, which naturally grow on the riverbanks and need lots of water to survive [the one growing in my own back yard consumes three times as much water as the rest of my fruit trees], are placed at the corners of the altar, not far from the large fire burning on top of it. Within a matter of minutes the fresh, beautifully-shaped leaves darken, twist and dry, hanging there lifeless and miserable in front of the massive celebrating crowds. Apart from being a catalyst for the upcoming Prayer for Rain recited on the last day of Sukkot, this sight serves as a symbolic reminder of our complete dependence on G-d, and of our thirst for Torah.

The same applies to the Chavata, the beating of the arava on the floor. When seeing how easily even the fresh leaves fall off the arava branches, we are reminded of our eternal state of mortal helplessness. I personally try to apply this idea to various aspects of Jewish practice, which include humbling experiences such as dipping in a mikveh or the horrible weakness I feel at the end of fast days.

The need for such visual effects and physical actions to reinforce and impress spiritual messages into our psyche is obvious. But it makes even more sense if we remember that there are six long months after Sukkot until all Jewish pilgrims gather again at the Temple in Jerusalem to celebrate Pesach together. Since Sukkot is followed by the year’s longest break between holidays, it is imperative to raise awareness of our need for G-d’s loving, caring, protecting and providing hand in our daily lives while we are far from the Place He chose. The arava was selected, due to its evident weakness, as the medium through which to convey this important value in Jewish life. In that sense, I’m happy to see my aravot begin to dry.

I once saw a rationalist bumper sticker that read “Prayer is for Wimps.” True enough. Prayer can be such a powerful tool and connect us to G-d only after we admit our own powerlessness and stand before Him with a genuine feeling of constant need. This is what we learn from the arava. Indeed, the secret of tefillah rests in the awe-inspiring knowledge that we are absolutely dependent on G-d, every minute of every day.

This is powerful. For truly attaching ourselves to the Absolute Power rests on our understanding that we are absolutely powerless without Him.

1. Freedom
Sukkot is the chag of Faith. We leave our homes, we don't know what the weather will be, and we feel just like Bnei Yisrael in the desert, under G-d’s wing. This year we understand this more than ever. Since Purim we have been participating in a “Sukkot Workshop” – relax, let go, understand you're not in charge. Lockdown and quarantine, no shul, none of our regular frameworks, schools, shows... our beloved routine. This year it's easier for us to relate to the chag, and fulfil the wondrous pasuk in Tehillim:

הַרְפּוּ וּדְעוּ כִּי־אָנֹכִי אֱלֹקִים

‘chill out’ and know that I am G-d.

2. Between Yom Kippur and Sukkot
We tend to think the highlight of the chagim is Yom Kippur, Neilah, and then we come back down to earth. But no, the peak is now. To fast all day like angels is not the ideal. There's something even higher, and it's called Sukkot.

Yom Kippur is only one day, when everything stops. The aim is to draw strength from it for the other 364 days of the year. To take the messages and energy of this special day into our lives, into nature, into the world. Thus writes Rav Kook: “Those days between Yom Kippur and Sukkot were given to educate us about returning to the matters of this world.” In other words, one needs to build a sukkah. One needs to go to the market to buy arba minim, and yes, there are family meals that need to address everyone's preferences and dislikes, and yes, sometimes the noise from the neighbor’s sukkah is annoying, and yes, you need to juggle all the kids, etc. But when you take what you've gleaned from Elul, Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, and apply them to all these seemingly mundane assignments... that's the ideal. Life itself.

3. Family
These are very much family-oriented days. Here's one idea, from the well-known Israeli parenting counselor, Ziva Meir (who also happens to be my mother-in-law): “Notice that many of the most moving songs in the world are about “Mother.” In all styles. In all languages. “Уми” in Arabic, “Mama” in Yiddish, everyone worships Mommy. How did Deborah the Prophetess say it? “Until I, Deborah, arose, I arose as mother in Israel.” אֵם בְּיִשְׂרָאֵֽל, a mother in Israel, is a concept. A Jewish mother should be proud of who she is. She does not need to put herself down. Mom has often become a focus of guilt. We blame her for anything that’s not okay or we just blame her for the sake of blaming...

Mothers! At this time of year, find out who you really are. Don't follow the external needs of others but connect to yourselves. After all, the world is lying to us all the time: at work, it's easy to glean compliments and at home, you can work hard all day every day and after all your effort, your child can give you a generous mouthful of chutzpah. Outside you receive feedback and praise, inside everyone is not always happy. Your work is sacred but not appreciated: why keep the house in order if it’s just going to be chaos again tomorrow?

“Eim BeYisrael” – mothers need to value themselves and what they do. They're full of self-criticism, taking on more and more assignments and constantly frustrated and unhappy. I urge them to connect inwards, give themselves a pat on the back for being who they are and doing what's right for them. Do that from the inside and everything outside will change as well.”

4. Know to Differentiate
On Shabbat during Sukkot we read Megillat Kohelet. In our crazy times, the profound words of Shlomo HaMelech carry a lot of significance: “Everything has its season and there is time for everything under the Heaven: a time to give birth and a time to die, a time to plant and a time to uproot… a time to cry and a time to laugh, a time to eulogize and a time to dance… a time to hug and a time to avoid h u g s …”

In our confusing reality, we try to do everything at once. Career and family and marriage and relationships and studies and hundreds of WhatsApp messages in between all that. Kohelet reminds us of a simple truth: one needs time for everything. Stop creating chaos in your reality. There are times for that, and there are... other times. There’s permitted and forbidden, right and wrong, and it’s important to discern the difference and be cognizant of what you’re doing and when. For each area of our lives to blossom and flourish we need to learn to differentiate and distinguish between what’s important and what’s more important.

5. Arba Minim

“As we know, the arba minim symbolizes unity, but it’s not only the unity of different parts of the people, but unity within us – unity between all the parts and all the situations Jewish souls can possibly encounter. Each one of us could be a rasha or a tzaddik. And what is our call as we shake the arba minim? First, connect to Am Yisrael. It doesn’t matter who you are or what you’ve done or do, you have a connection too; you can come closer to being a tzaddik as well. Second, it’s not only “connect” but also “wake up!": we are shaking the arba minim to the four corners of the earth and up down, and the message is: whoever, whatever, wherever you’ve been thrown or fallen, do not despair. You can come back and come closer from absolutely anywhere in the world.”

6. Ushpizin

The Ushpizin, the guests we invite into our sukkot, are seven fathers of the nation – Avraham, Yitzchak, Ya’akov, Yosef, Moshe, Aharon and David. There are many profound and kabbalistic explanations for this custom, but in “B’eer Miriam,” I found an historic reason I’ve never thought of before: our national fathers were largely nomads. Avraham left his birthplace and came to Israel, and then to Egypt, and back. Yitzchak went to the land of the Philistines during the famine, and then to the western Negev, to Beer Sheva and Chevron. Ya’akov fled to Charan, returned to Canaan, and emigrated to Egypt. Yosef was sold as a slave, Moshe and Aharon wandered for 40 years in the desert and Moshe had already been in Egypt as a child. David too fled from Shaul and Avshalom.

Their lives were lives of sukkah, not of permanent homes. They well understood how much the permanent reality is transient, and how much flexibility, faith and creativity one needs in life. And, despite all the inconveniences and troubles mentioned here, each one of our ancestors built himself up and led and educated. We too can take our circumstances and become better people.

7. Simcha

You can’t miss it. Simcha is supposed to be the central element of Sukkot – and you shall rejoice in your holiday... and you shall just be happy. The Rambam tells us that in Jerusalem on Sukkot there was “excess simcha” and writes that simcha on Sukkot is a “great service [of G-d],” while in our sidurim Sukkot is referred to as simcha, the time of our joy.

So what’s the connection between joy and Sukkot? The big test in our times – generally – is not one of poverty but of wealth. Not of lack but of plenty. Nevertheless, most of us are not content. Chag HaSukkot offers an alternative: we leave our comfortable homes for a shaky hut, which reminds us of the wanderings in the desert. That’s how our ancestors lived. And it is precisely out of this minimalism and simplicity we remember the great historical story and everything we’ve been through. We look at nature anew (schach, lulav, etrog, etc.), and renew our bonds with our families and community during this week of celebration. We learn to appreciate everything we have around us all year long... and be happy.

8. Starting Over

Meals, dancing, candy bags, laundry, and suddenly, we’re starting over again. The Shabbat after Simchat Torah is Shabbat Bereishit, on which we read the first parasha of the Torah again. Yet we notice something intriguing: the Torah does not spend too much time on the Creation of the World. Rather than describing the details of the cosmos and the stars and the oceans at length, it stops and details the first sin of the first human being. As it continues, the Torah does not report on all the peoples and kingdoms that rose and fell during those times, but it does stop to record how Avraham Avinu welcomes guests into his tent, or how Rivka quenches the camels’ thirst near the well.

Why? Because that’s what important. The Torah is not a book of science or history. The word הוראה comes from the word הוראה – to teach, to guide, to educate. These “small deeds” are the most significant and influential.

The effort and the running around – the sukkah, the house, the meals, the little conversations, the family moments – all of these are the foundation stones of simcha, solidarity and stability.

The Ethics of Etrogim
SHORT ETROG STORIES

The $1,000 Etrog
(Heard from the etrog dealer who used to bring etrogim to Rav Eliahu.)

Rav Eliahu was famous for being able to assess an etrog in seconds. He would check hundreds of etrogim yet despite the huge quantity, he never once said “pasul” invalid, but only “take another one.” Only once did I hear him say “pasul.”

A man came in and proudly told the Rav: “I paid $1,000 for this beautiful etrog!” The Rav looked at it and asked the man: “If this etrog is pasul, will you get your money back?” “Yes,” said the man, “I bought it on condition the Rav says it’s kosher.” “Tell me,” replied Rav Eliahu. “Have you bought your wife some jewelry for the chag?” That’s how he would check hundreds of etrogim yet despite the huge quantity, he never once said “pasul.”

The Rav studied my etrog mitzvah! “Pasul?! How can it be pasul?”

The Rav turned the etrog over and showed the man a very small hole near the stipe, partially covered by the stipe itself. And when the Rav moved the leaf, he revealed signs of a caterpillar burrowing into the fruit.

“You don’t need to splash out $1,000 on an etrog. It’s fine to buy a mehudar (halachically beautiful) etrog like everybody else for 100 shekels and go make your wife happy with the rest of the money. That’s a positive Torah mitzvah!”

After the man left, we asked the Rav how he had managed to spot that tiny hidden hole. He told us that in Chassidic tradition, הא לברכה נל מברכה stands for (let not the foot of pride come to me). “This etrog did not match its mnemonic.”

The Rav’s Own Etrog
When the dealer brought Rav Eliahu etrogim for himself and his family, he would bring him the very best he had. The Rav would select a few, lay them all out in a line and say, “This one’s the most beautiful, but I won’t take it. I’ll take this one or that one.”

When the dealer asked him why he didn’t take the most beautiful one for himself he replied, “So as not to make Jews feel bad. When they see the Rabbi has an etrog with a slight dent – that he too is not perfect – they will value their own etrog more. They won’t think it’s sub-standard. And they won’t think that Rabbis take the best for themselves and leave whatever’s left for everyone else.”

Fair Swap
“When I was eight, my father was tragically killed in an accident. When I reached bar mitzvah, I really wanted my own etrog but my mother couldn’t afford it. I saved up, little by little, until I had enough to go to Machane Yehuda and buy my very own etrog in a sealed box which said “mehudar” on the lid! I was overjoyed.

But when I opened the box, the etrog really wasn’t that beautiful. I didn’t know whether I’d been deceived or that I just didn’t know the halachot, so I decided to knock on Rav Mordechai Eliahu’s door (he lived very close to us).

The Rav studied my etrog from all angles... ‘Kasher’ (kosher): ‘Only kasher?’ I said. ‘Not mehudar?’ ‘Kasher.’ I kissed his hand and left.

I’d barely closed the door when someone came out and said, “Excuse me, the Rav asks you to come back inside.” The Rav smiled at me and said, ‘Let’s do an exchange deal. You give me your etrog, the kosher one, and I’ll give you mine, the mehudar one.’

I blushed and couldn’t stop the tears. I gratefully accepted the Rav’s offer and I was the happiest boy in town.

The next day, I went to daven in Rav Eliahu’s shul. I wanted to see what etrog he would make the beracha on. Lo and behold... mine!

Suddenly, I understood.

Zionist Etrogim
“Once I visited Rav Eliahu and we were talking about Rabbi Yisrael Abuhatzeira, the Baba Sali zt”l. ‘Come, I’ll show you something,’ said the Rav, and took out what looked like some very thin sticks. ‘What are they?’ I asked. ‘Dry etrogim originally grown in Morocco. The Baba Sali used to send me some every year.’

Then he added: ‘I never made a beracha on them though. I only say a beracha on etrogim from our holy Land. I told that to the Baba Sali and he still sent me his Moroccan ones. But there’s nothing like the sanctity of Eretz Yisrael and the etrogim of our holy Land:’

Rabbi Mordechai Eliahu זצ”ל was the Rishon Letzion and Sephardi Chief Rabbi of Israel.
Ya’akov Avinu’s greatness lay in the fact that he managed to maintain his spiritual stability even in the midst of constant life crises. His brother was out to kill him, he fled to the wily Lavan and despite his uncle’s trickery and deceit, Ya’akov still remained faithful to the mitzvot and upright and pure in his ways.

Even Ya’akov’s two names say something of his mental strength in the face of his difficult life. יעקב, heel – the curved area at the base of the leg. יעקב can also mean a cause of. Ya’akov’s other name, ישראל, contains the Hebrew word ישר, straight. Despite his many struggles with forces more numerous or powerful than he, Ya’akov’s integrity, sense of right, and loyalty to G-d remained intact.

Israel, the aspiration to uprightness, purity, and truth – is the ideal name. Ya’akov, the necessity to face evil and cruel reality in our world – is the actual name. The tension between the real and the ideal accompanies Am Yisrael’s long and complicated history, yet we are known by our ideal name.

This teaches us that despite everything we have been through – the persecutions, the pogroms and the murders, the battle for good and truth has not been lost. On the contrary. Our core values became stronger and more prominent. The wandering Jew, even when walking through the valley of the shadow of death, did not fear the evil forces attempting to forcibly convert and confuse him. The more they tortured us, the more we grew.

Am Yisrael has been through its fair share of ups and downs. Yet whenever we were in trouble, wherever we were, our eternal values remained firm and unshaken. This remarkable ability – to be stable while everything around you is unstable – is the hidden power of Ya’akov Avinu. And indeed, in this sense, he has never died. As we continue to live our lives based on Jewish principles and values, he lives on too.

“Esav returned along the way to Seir on that day. Ya’akov went to Sukkot” (Bereishit 33). The Zohar expounds upon the juxtaposition of these two journeys, likening them to the relationship between Yom Kippur, when the scapegoat is sent to Azazel, and the Jewish people moving into their sukkot. After Ya’akov, the idealist, freed himself from the influence of Esav, the materialist, he was able to relax in the shade of truth and faith in his sukkah. The sukkah is the antithesis of aggressiveness, dominance and evil. Its physicality is purely functional – a vessel for holding Jewish law, faith and deep spiritual joy.

Sukkot actually contains a double message. On the one hand, our temporary, often flimsy sukkah symbolizes transience and impermanence – the exile. Yet it is also a holy sanctuary within the ups and downs of regular life, a little Israel among the other nations.

There is no contradiction between the two. Even in exile, in unimaginable conditions, we continued to develop our culture and strengthen our spirit.

This double message carries far-reaching implications. In our times, mass media has exposed our homes to the world outside and the winds of that world blow strongly in all corners of our homes and communities.

So much so that the Jewish home is no longer as stable as it once was. Its foundations are wobbling and for many, it is no longer a safe fortress. Nevertheless, if the home is still identified as a Jewish one, it is likely to remain that way forever, whatever the challenges. In such a home, the spirit of the individuals, the family, and the nation must be reinforced, nurtured and developed.

Our nation possesses such inner strength to combat and overcome life’s challenges because we inherited this trait from Ya’akov Avinu. He taught us that we can overcome temptations, avoid danger and stay strong, whatever the circumstances.

Am Yisrael, the ideal people, has the power to filter things and to absorb only the good, the true and the beautiful, while discarding falsity, ugliness and evil. Even if our sukkah appears to be unstable on the outside, there is nothing more stable than the spirit within.
True Simcha

Rav Soloveitchik was fond of discussing a comment of the Ramban in his Hasagot to Sefer HaMitzvot (shoresh rishon, s.v. vehapli‘ah). The Ramban believes that the recitation of Hallel is a d’oraita obligation. This is in contrast to the Rambam, who did not count the recitation of Hallel on Yom Tov in the count of taryag mitzvot because he held it is only a mitzvah deRabbanan. The Ramban cites the pasuk in reference to the shira of the Levi‘im: “On a day of your gladness, and on your Festivals, and on your New Moons, you shall sound the trumpets over your offerings and over your shelamim-offerings” (Bamidbar 28:47). Rashi adds, “One sings shira only out of a feeling of joy and goodness of heart.”

Thus, the mitzvah of simchat Yom Tov includes more than the offering of a Korban Shelamim and the partaking of its meat and of wine. According to the Ramban, one of the manifestations of this mitzvah is the singing of praises to Hashem in the form of Hallel. Simcha also includes the obligation to provide colored or pressed linen garments for one’s wife and to distribute nuts and almonds to one’s children (Pesachim 109a; Yerushalmi Pesachim 10:1).

The Rambam (Hilchot Yom Tov 6:18; Hilchot Chagigah 2:14) writes that simcha on Yom Tov requires not only that we ourselves eat, drink, and be in a joyous mood. The Rambam terms such enjoyment as simchat kreiros (joy of one’s stomach), instead of simchat mitzvah. Rather, on Yom Tov, there is also a mitzvah to provide for the poor and those who are less fortunate, to enable them to have food and drink for Yom Tov. In other words, an important part of the mitzvah of simcha is to be mesameach others.

That is why there is a minhag to make a tzedaka appeal every Yom Tov, as an expression of simchat Yom Tov. In fact, it is because we pledge tzedaka on Yom Tov that the Yizkor prayer was introduced (Levush, Orach Chaim 490:9). The pledge of tzedaka should be considered as a zechut for one’s parent(s) who raised a child with proper attitudes and values regarding sharing their assets with others. Thus, the recitation of Yizkor is not at all a form of aveilut, but rather a fulfillment of the mitzvah of simcha.

The notion of sharing one’s simcha with others may be relevant to a chatan during his seven days of Sheva Berachot. The Rama (Orach Chaim 135:1) records that a chatan should be given an aliya since it is like a Yom Tov for him. What is the halachic basis for this minhag?

The Rav explained that a chatan has a mitzvah of simcha. Since Talmud Torah is a form of simcha, as evidenced by the restrictions to learning that apply to an avel and on Tisha B’Av, it follows that teaching Torah is a further fulfillment of the mitzvah of simcha. Through teaching others, one causes them to experience simcha. For this reason as well, the minhag is for the chatan to deliver divrei Torah at the chatan’s tish. The chatan receives an aliya in which he is melameid Torah to the tzibbur that listens to the kriya, essentially the function of every oleh laTorah, in order to enhance his mitzvah of simcha by being mesameach others.

According to this explanation, it would seem one should endeavor to be called up for an aliya on every Yom Tov, not only on the Yamim Noraim (as mentioned by the Mateh Efrayim 584:17). This way, one adds to the joy of others by teaching them Torah, and by so doing, he fulfills the mitzvah of simchat Yom Tov.

There is something very strange about the festival of Sukkot.

On the one hand, it is the festival supremely associated with joy. In the whole Torah, joy is not mentioned at all in relation to Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur or Pesach, once in connection with Shavuot and three times in connection with Sukkot. Hence its name: zman simchateinu, the festival of our joy.

Yet what it recalls is one of the more negative elements of the wilderness years: “You shall live in booths seven days; all citizens in Israel shall live in booths, so that future generations may know that I made the Israelites live in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt, I the L-rd your G-d” (Vayikra 23:42-43).

For 40 years, the Israelites lived without permanent homes, often on the move. They were in the wilderness, in no man’s land, where it is hard to know what to expect and what dangers lie in wait along the way. The people certainly lived under Divine protection. But they could never be sure in advance whether it would be forthcoming and what form this protection might take. It was a prolonged period of insecurity.

How then are we to understand the fact that of all festivals, Sukkot is called zman simchateinu, the festival of our joy? It would have made sense to call Shavuot – the day of revelation at Sinai – the festival of joy. But why give that title to a festival that commemorates 40 years of exposure to the heat, cold, wind and rain.

Besides which, what was the miracle? Pesach and Shavuot recall miracles. But traveling through the wilderness with only temporary homes was neither miraculous nor unique. That is what people who travel through the wilderness do. They must. They are on a journey. They can only have a temporary dwelling. In this respect, there was nothing special about the Israelites’ experience.

It was this consideration that led Rabbi Eliezer to suggest that the sukkah represents the Clouds of Glory, ananei kavod, that accompanied the Israelites during those years, sheltering them from heat and cold, protecting them from their enemies, and guiding them on the way. This is a beautiful and imaginative solution to the problem. It identifies a miracle and explains why a festival should be dedicated to remembering it. That is why Rashi and Ramban take it as the plain sense of the verse.

But it is difficult, nonetheless. A sukkah looks nothing like the Clouds of Glory. It would be hard to imagine anything less like the Clouds of Glory.

Rabbi Akiva dissents from Rabbi Eliezer’s view and says that a sukkah is what it says it is: a hut, a booth, a temporary dwelling. What, according to Rabbi Akiva, was the miracle? There is no way of knowing the answer. But we can guess.

If a sukkah represents the Clouds of Glory – the view of Rabbi Eliezer – then it celebrates G-d’s miracle. If it represents nothing other than a sukkah itself – Rabbi Akiva’s view – then it celebrates the human miracle of which Yirmiyahu spoke when he said: “Thus said the L-rd, ‘I remember the devotion of your youth, how as a bride you loved Me and followed Me in the wilderness, through a land not sown’” (Yirmiyahu 2:2).

The Israelites may have complained and rebelled. But they followed G-d. They kept going. Like Avraham and Sarah, they were prepared to journey into the unknown.

If we understand this to be the miracle, we can infer a deep truth about faith itself. Faith is not certainty. Faith is the courage to live with uncertainty. Almost every phase of the Exodus was fraught with difficulties, real or imagined. That is what makes the Torah so powerful. It does not pretend that life is any easier than it is. The road is not straight and the journey is long. Unexpected things happen. Crises suddenly appear. It becomes important to embed in a people’s memory the knowledge that we can handle the unknown. G-d is with us, giving us the courage we need.
Each Sukkot it is as if G-d were reminding us: don’t think you need solid walls to make you feel safe. I led your ancestors through the desert so they would never forget the journey they had to make and the obstacles they had to overcome to get to this Land. He said, “I made the Israelites live in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt” (Vayikra 23:43). In those booths, fragile and open to the elements, the Israelites learned the courage to live with uncertainty.

Other nations told stories that celebrated their strength. They built palaces and castles as expressions of invincibility. The Jewish people were different. They carried with them a story about the uncertainties and hazards of history. They spoke of their ancestors’ journey through the wilderness without homes, houses, protection against the elements. It is a story of spiritual strength, not military strength.

Sukkot is a testament to the Jewish people’s survival. Even if it loses its Land and is cast again into the wilderness, it will lose neither heart nor hope. It will remember it spent its early years as a nation living in a sukkah, a temporary dwelling exposed to the elements. It will know that in the wilderness, no encampment is permanent. It will keep traveling until once again it reaches the promised land: Israel. Home. It is no accident that the Jewish people is the only one to have survived 2,000 years of exile and dispersion, its identity intact and energy unabated. It is the only people who can live in a shack with leaves as a roof and yet feel surrounded by clouds of glory. It is the only people who can live in a temporary dwelling and yet rejoice.

In Radical Uncertainty, the book recently published by John Kay (economist) and Mervyn King (former Governor of the Bank of England), a distinction is made between risk, which is calculable, and uncertainty, which is not. They argue that people have relied too much on calculations of probability while neglecting the fact that danger may appear from a completely unexpected source. The sudden appearance of the Coronavirus proved their point. People knew there was a possibility of a pandemic. But no one knew what it would be like, where it would come from, how rapidly it would spread, and what toll it would take.

More important than the calculation of probabilities, they say, is understanding the situation, answering the question, “What is going on?” This, they say, is never answered by statistics or predictions but rather by narrative, by telling a story. That is exactly what Sukkot is about. It is a story about uncertainty. It tells us that we can know everything else, but we will never know what tomorrow will bring. Time is a journey across a wilderness.

On Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, we pray to be written into the Book of Life. On Sukkot, we rejoice because we believe we have received a positive answer to our prayer. But as we turn to face the coming year, we acknowledge at the outset that life is fragile, vulnerable in a dozen different ways. We do not know what our health will be, what our career or livelihood will be, or what will happen to society and to the world. We cannot escape exposure to risk. That is what life is.

The sukkah symbolizes living with unpredictability. Sukkot is the festival of radical uncertainty. But it places it within the framework of a narrative, exactly as Kay and King suggest. It tells us that though we journey through a wilderness, we as a people will reach our destination. If we see life through the eyes of faith, we will know we are surrounded by clouds of glory. Amid uncertainty, we will find ourselves able to rejoice. We need no castles for protection or palaces for glory. A humble sukkah will do, for when we sit within it, we sit beneath what the Zohar calls “the shade of faith.”

I believe the experience of leaving the protection of a house and entering the exposure of the sukkah is a way of taming our fear of the unknown. It says: we have been here before. We are all travelers on a journey. The Divine Presence is with us. We need not be afraid. That is a source of the resilience we need in our interconnected, hazardous, radically uncertain world.

Why Kohelet on Sukkot?

As a psychiatrist, I was once asked to explain why we read Kohelet on Sukkot, the season of joy. After all, Kohelet is so terribly depressing, negating everything as futile and worthless.

Sukkot is indeed the season of simcha. However, our concept of simcha is flawed.

I have heard people say, “If only I could get out of debt, I would be happy,” or “If only I had a better job, I’d be happy,” or “If only I could get relief from my arthritis, I’d be happy,” or “If only my daughter would do a shidduch, I’d be happy.” The “If onlys” are countless. I’ve been around long enough to see people get what they thought would make them happy, but remain unhappy.

Happiness does not depend on comfort or pleasure. They are indeed admirable desires but they do not produce happiness. The Talmud says, “No one leaves this world having achieved even half of his desires.”

In Kohelet, Shlomo states this clearly. “As a king, I was the richest of all. I did not deny myself any human pleasure. But I found that this too was a vexation.”

It is wonderful to enjoy good things, but don’t deceive yourself that these enjoyments will bring you happiness. Happiness is achieved when you work toward becoming what G-d wants you to be, a mentsch!

What separates a mentsch from animals is not his greater intellect. Animals are totally self-absorbed, seeking their physical pleasures. One cannot be happy if one lives a life of self-absorption, seeking pleasure. You are a mentsch when you get out of your own skin, when you do chesed, when you have a goal in life of serving G-d instead of expecting that G-d should fulfill all of your desires.

Shlomo ends Kohelet by saying, “In summary, fear G-d and do His mitzvot, because then you will be a mentsch.” Only when one is a mentsch can one be happy. So, reading Kohelet on Sukkot is most important. We live in a culture that places self-gratification as a goal in life. Kohelet tells us this can never result in simcha.

There is a well-known custom of inviting seven special guests, seven shepherds of our nation, into our sukkot, one on each night of Sukkot. According to the Zohar, each of these precious shepherds – Avraham, Yitzchak, Yaakov, Yosef, Moshe, Aharon and David – is considered a day to which the holiday is dedicated, and all of Israel then joins them.

Do these shepherds actually come to grace our sukkot as guests? How do we incorporate that concept to impact our celebration? And why do we invite these special guests on Sukkot rather than on Pesach, the other seven-day holiday?

The Otzrot HaTorah, citing the Shelah HaKadosh, writes that with such exalted guests, we must practice decorum in the sukkah, and keep our speech Torah-based so our guests will feel comfortable. The Belzer Rebbe adds that the great wives of these leaders accompany them too. The Netivot Shalom notes they have come from Gan Eden, a place of total spirituality, to visit us on this physical earth. That is one of the reasons why they can only come to a temporary abode like the sukkah. While the walls of our permanent homes absorb all the improper speech and untoward behavior of the entire year (says the Minchat Michael), the walls of the sukkah are inherently holy, and the schach is the shade of G-d’s protection.

The walls of the sukkah represent the Clouds of Glory that surrounded us at Sinai and then descended on the Mishkan. As such, they represent the bond between the physical and the spiritual. The clouds, like the sukkah, are a temporary manifestation of G-d’s presence, and we can achieve that state through our service to Him. The ultimate bond, however, is achieved in the World to Come, from where our guests have come to visit us on this holiday. When we sit in the sukkah, we are basking in the joy of being in G-d’s presence. Therefore, if one experiences discomfort while in the sukkah, one is exempt from sitting there, while one should attempt to “live” in the sukkah, catching up on one’s reading and Torah study in this holy environment.

According to the Netivot Shalom, while the covenant between Hashem and Bnei Yisrael was originally forged at Sinai and the Clouds of Glory surrounded us at that time, that covenant is renewed every year when the world is recreated on Rosh Hashanah. Then we can again draw His presence down to us as we try to repair the world anew.

Each of these leaders renewed something in the world. Each year, as the world is being recreated, we draw upon these characteristics to help us repair the world, and we ask that these seven come down and impart their energies to us as individuals so we can work on our mission as G-d’s nation. We do not need their help on Pesach, but on Sukkot, when we’ve just started rebuilding the world, we can use their help with chesed and gevura and all the other traits they embody.

Sukkot is called z’man simchateinu, the season of our joy, for it is the only holiday the Torah commands us multiple times to be joyous. Otzrot HaTorah cites the Zohar who picks up on this nomenclature. Every time we celebrate a simcha, we are joined by our parents, and G-d brings the departed souls of the previous generations to celebrate with us. How can we acknowledge their presence as our guests? By inviting the poor to our sukkah or giving them financial, spiritual or emotional support we are taking what we would otherwise offer these guests and giving it to others. If you keep your celebration focused only on yourselves, the ushpizin want no part of it and leave. After all, the whole concept of ushpizin is inviting guests. Your spiritual high must be grounded in reality and must include those less fortunate. It is, after all, Chag HaAsif, the holiday of gathering the wheat, but the gathering should also include gathering people together in joy.

Let us make our special guests feel welcome. Make each one the center of the conversation of the night dedicated to him. The point of Sukkot is to give hope to people, for just as the Clouds of Glory surrounded us in the desert, so does G-d’s presence surround us throughout our lives, and He sends down some majestic mentors and role models to help us on our journey.

Transience is at the heart of the sukkah experience. The need to feel it’s not a permanent home influenced a multitude of halachic discussions: its maximum and minimum height, the materials it can be made from, the obligation of a mezuzah, and many others. When you live in an impromptu hut, you remember the trials of the wilderness and the wondrous Divine Providence that protected us along the way.

A major principle of Sukkot is תֵּשְׁבוּ כְּעֵין תָּדוּרוּ – dwell in the sukkah as you would in your own home. This is why we drag our beloved sofa out into the yard, eat our meals outside and sleep in the sukkah as well.

We make a huge effort to feel permanent within the temporary. To dwell in the truth, within the passing moment.

הֲבֵל הֲבָלִים אָמַר קֹהֶלֶת... הַכֹּל הָֽבֶל – “Futility of futilities said Kohelet... everything is futile (Kohelet 1:2). The word הֲבֵל (variously translated as futility, emptiness, vapor) appears no fewer than 38 times in Megillat Kohelet. However, none of those translations are accurate for the meaning of the word here.

Transience. Everything is transient. Everything will pass. Everything ends and moves on. It’s neither good nor bad. Neither judgmental nor negative. It’s a fundamental truth Shlomo HaMelech lays down at the outset of his book: our lives on earth are finite. Short-lived. Nothing lasts forever, and certainly not us.

Our parents said, “Before you blink, you already have grandchildren,” and before we know it, we’ll find ourselves saying similar things to our children. When we raised our first son, every stage seemed like an eternity. We couldn’t imagine his teeth would ever come through. We bought baby clothes very carefully without understanding that at those sizes they’d last a day and a half. From child to child we internalize that babyhood just whooshes by. That we need to take in the smell because in another moment it won’t be the same...

When Rabbi Yochanan finds Rabbi Elazar crying on his deathbed (Berachot 5b), he asks him why he is so distraught. For the Torah, you didn’t learn? For your livelihood? For losing children? And Rabbi Elazar answers, “I’ll manage without everything you asked about. But your incredible beauty, Rabbi Yochanan, that like us all will decompose and turn to dust, for that I cry!” And Rabbi Yochanan shocks us with his reply: “For that indeed you should cry!” And they both wept, over the fleeting nature of beauty and the death that overcomes us all.

When we stand before a stunning sunrise or sunset, we are awestruck. Something about that beauty strokes eternity, stems from eternity. Such an abundance of beauty is beyond us. So we do our best to bathe in the pleasure because it’s going to disappear any second. We snap a photo but sense how pathetic that is. We can’t just fold this splendor and stuff it into our pocket. Because just as it is sublime, it is also fleeting, temporary, ungraspable. Every brief blossom, every autumn leaf, every sunset... arouses yearning, longing, almost distress. For it lives forever in the passing moment (if we plant it within us), and then... it’s gone!

Are “fleeting days” empty days, with no hope or expectation? No! Don’t interpret הֲבֵל as futile! We were not given days of futility to waste away on this earth, for what was the reason to invest in love if our days are nonsensical? Kohelet tells us: treasure the days we have together, because life is temporary, and hence so valuable. Fill your days with love and good... “enjoy life”!

We are permanent tenants in our temporary sukkah. Through that, we understand nothing is really permanent.

Yet even when we return into our homes we can still observe תֵּשְׁבוּ כְּעֵין תָּדוּרוּ. We can experience the total beauty of the moment... of every moment, while it lasts. We can appreciate and value all the good in our personal, family and communal lives. And we can remember the sukkot in the desert and realize the abundance and goodness we are enjoying here and now in Eretz Yisrael.

Etrogim
The Magic and Mystery

Etrogim were extensively cultivated in the Holy Land at the time of the Second Temple, and images of etrogim are found at many archaeological sites of that era, including mosaics at the Maon Synagogue, Beth Alpha Synagogue, and Hamat Tiberias Synagogue. The etrog is also found on numerous Bar Kochba coins.

After the fall of Jerusalem in 70 CE, exiled Jews planted citron orchards wherever the climate allowed: in Southern Europe (Spain, Greece, and Italy) as well as in North Africa and Asia Minor. Jews who settled north of the warmer citron-growing areas depended on imported etrogim, which caused much anxiety given the dangers and uncertainties of sea travel. By the 17th century, some of the most popular sources for etrogim were the islands of Corsica and Corfu.

Since the late 1850s, the Fruit of the Goodly Tree Association in Palestine represented etrog farmers who marketed their crops to Jews in Europe. Some Jewish communities still preferred citrons from Italy, Greece, Morocco, or Yemen, but many Jews seeking citrons turned back to Eretz Yisrael, the Land of Israel.

Diamante Etrog

The Cedro diamante is a cultivar of citron that grows in the citron coast, located in the province of Cosenza, Calabria, on the south-western coast of Italy, which is its most known cultivation point.

Many religious Jews call it Yanova Esrog (Genoa citron), because of its long association with the trading port of Genoa in northern Italy, from where it was exported to other countries. Genoa was known to supply citron for the Jews since the times of the Tosafists, along with surrounding municipalities Sanremo, Bordighera, and the rest of Liguria. Most adherent to the diamante variety of Calabria are still the Chabad sect, whose late Rabbis were always in support of this traditional variety, even claiming by virtue of a legend that Moshe himself obtained his etrog from this location. Among the other Hasidic sects, it is most used by the Satmars.

Greek Etrog

The Greek citron was also called pitima, or the cedro col pigolo (“citron with a pitom”), because of its usually persisting pitom (carpel).

The following description is from the Nurenbergische Hesperides (2nd Volume; 8th Chap.) by Johann Christoph Volkamer, titled “About the Cedro col Pigolo.” He was growing that kind in his botanical garden in Nuremberg, and writes that it can also be called the “Jewish Citron,” since it is mostly used for the Four Species.

“This tree does not become particularly big. The leaves are smaller than those of other citrons, and serrated, oblong, pointed towards the front, mixed with many thorns. The bloom is small and reddish from outside. The fruit blossoms are not less oblong from the beginning, appearing as reddish and dark-green; thereafter they turn entirely green, and when they ripen, straw-yellow, remaining, however, rather small all the time and never growing to a proper size, like other kinds of citron.”

Balady Etrog

The balady citron is a variety of etrog, grown in Israel, mostly for Jewish ritual purposes. Not native to the region, it was imported around 500 or 300 BCE by either Jewish or Greek settlers.

During the 1800s, the Balady was grown on the outskirts of Nablus, Nazareth, Tiberias, Safed and Alma al-Shaib, in Umm al-Fahm and in Lifta village near Jerusalem. In the 1870s, Rabbi Chaim Elozor Wax devoted himself to its cultivation and organized shipments to Europe.

He felt the Balady citron had the strongest traditional lineage of pureness of species, and claimed it was to be found in the wild when Rabban arrived in the county. He wrote many letters to the rabbis hoping to influence the diaspora to use the Balady citron.
Balady citron varieties are still grown and sold today in the Diaspora as well as in Israel and are favored by the followers of the Brisker Rov and the Chazon Ish.

Moroccan Etrog

The Moroccan citron is a true citron variety native to Assads, Morocco, which is still today its main center of cultivation. It was described by the Moroccan professor, Henri Chapot, as being a sweet citron, meaning its pulp is low in acid.

The exact date when the variety came into use for the etrog is unknown. According to local Jewry, it has been with them since they were exiled to Morocco after the destruction of the Second Temple. From then on it was highly revered by all the rabbis and communities of North Africa, without any interruption or controversy.

Yemenite Etrog

The Yemenite citron is a distinct variety of citron, usually containing no juice vesicles in its fruit segments. The bearing tree and the mature fruit’s size are somewhat larger than the trees and fruit of other varieties of citron.

Etrog haCushi is mentioned in the Mishnah as well as in both the Babylonian (Sukkah 36a) and the Jerusalem Talmud (Sukkah 3:6). The most common interpretation is that the Biblical Cush refers to Ethiopia and therefore Etrog haCushi should also refer to something which could be called the Ethiopian citron. The Ethiopian Jews did not observe the mitzvah of the Four Species, even though they did anticipate the Sukkot festival. This may have been due to their lack of ability to procure the species. Some believe this is due to some Karaite influence, whose biblical interpretation indicates the Four Species are only used as roofing for a sukkah (s‘chach), and not for a separate waving ritual. However, the Yemenite citron is available in Ethiopia and its markets, where it is sold for consumption. According to Erich Isaac, the late researcher of citrus distribution, the Yemenite citron is synonymous with the Ethiopian citron, as a result of Ethiopian rule in Yemen in the past.

Did You Know?

- Eating the etrog or etrog jam is considered a segula (efficacious remedy) for a woman to have an easy childbirth.
- The heaviest etrog recorded weighed 7.5 kilo (16.5 lbs).
- Known botanically as citrus medica, the etrog has been used as a remedy for seasickness, muscular pain and skin disease.
- In India, the etrog peel is eaten to overcome bad breath.

- In Panama, citron leaves are ground up and combined with other ingredients and given as an antidote for poison.
- The etrog is also called “Adam’s apple,” or “paradise apple,” and is one of the suggested candidates for the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge in the Garden of Eden.
- Today Israel is the world’s leading supplier of etrogim for Sukkot, and most Jewish communities worldwide pride themselves in using the holy fruit from the Holy Land.
“If I’m Here, Everything is Here”

REFLECTIONS ON Z’MAN SIMCHATEINU

Sukkot is defined as Z’man Simchateinu, the season of our rejoicing. Nevertheless, it is hard to imagine true and authentic rejoicing while many of us are living under lockdown, in quarantine, or apart from our families. I wish to highlight a special aspect of Sukkot that might help us experience Z’man Simchateinu on a more profound level this year.

The pinnacle of the festivities during the era of the Beit HaMikdash was Simchat Beit HaShoeva, the Rejoicing of the Water-Drawing House. The Rabbis tell us: “One who has not seen the Simchat Beit HaShoeva has never seen rejoicing in their life.” (Mishnah, Sukkah 5:1) The Rabbis asked and answered: “Why is it referred to as ‘Beit HaShoeva’? Because from there they draw the Holy Spirit, as it states (Yeshayahu 12:3), ‘You will draw water in joy from the springs of salvation’” (Talmud Yerushalmi, Sukkah 22b).

Among the stories in the Talmud about this event is this puzzling statement: “When Hillel the Elder was rejoicing at the Simchat Beit HaShoeva, he said this: If I’m here, everything is here, and if I’m not here, who is here?” (Sukkah 53a). How can Hillel, our role model for humility, have said something that sounds so arrogant?

The explanation can be found in one of the most profound lessons of Megillat Kohelet (Ecclesiastes), which we read on Sukkot: “For to a man who is good in His sight, He has given wisdom and knowledge and joy, but to the sinner He has given an occupation to gather and to accumulate” (2:26). King Solomon’s frustration relates to his inability to find happiness in all his endless assets, possessions and properties. He was the richest of kings, but it did not give him a sense of security and joy. He says: “I built myself houses, and I planted myself vineyards. I made myself gardens and orchards, and I planted in them all sorts of fruit trees. I made myself pools of water to irrigate a forest sprouting with trees... I had possessions of cattle and flocks, more than all who were before me in Jerusalem. I accumulated for myself also silver and gold, and the treasures of the kings and the provinces” (2:4–8). After years of accumulating and gathering, he realizes it is all in vain because nothing external can make him happy in this world: “Then I turned [to look] at all my deeds that my hands had wrought and upon the toil that I had toiled to do, and behold everything is vanity and frustration, and there is no profit under the sun” (2:11).

According to Kohelet, the “sinner” is the person who misses out on life. He is the one who is obsessively occupied with gathering and accumulating wealth. The person who finds joy and happiness is the one who has the wisdom and the courage to realize our happiness and our sense of security comes from within us and not from any external factor. That is why “being here” was everything for Hillel.

We tend to think of our brick homes as providing us with a sense of safety and belonging. But in truth, as long as our safety depends on external factors, we will remain inherently insecure and unhappy. Our careers, expertise, accomplishments and assets do not define who we are. It is our deeper purpose in the world that brings meaning to our lives and gives us the sense we belong here.

Rav Avraham Yitzchak Kook writes: “I must find my happiness within myself, not from social acceptance, not from my career nor anything else. The more I will know myself, the more I allow myself to be original and stand on my own – with an inner awareness combined with wisdom, emotion, poetry – the more the light of G-d will enlighten me and the more my strengths will evolve to become a blessing to me and the world” (Arpilei Tohar, p31).

True happiness is not defined by our social strata. It is not achieved through the acquisition of wealth, nor is it a result of any pleasurable experience. True happiness is based on the courage to present who we truly are. That is why there is no more appropriate timing to learn the message of Kohelet than on Sukkot. This was our historical harvest festival – Chag HaAsif – when the farmers, having gathered all the produce of their fields, estimated the annual revenue of their business. It is specifically at this time of ingathering and assessment we were told to move out of our comfort zone and into the sukkah. Sitting in the most fragile possible dwelling under the shade of the schach, which symbolizes the Shechina (Divine Presence), teaches us to lend meaning and purpose to all we have accumulated.

In her book, Gifts of Imperfection, Brené Brown writes: “Often people attempt to live their lives backward: they try to have more things, or more money, in order to do more of what they want so that they will be happier. The way it actually works is the reverse. You must first be who you really are, then do what you really need to do, in order to have what you want.” On Sukkot, we stop living our lives backward. We realize that in order to find true joy, we need to be our most authentic selves, and define ourselves without any external factors or conditions.

Sometimes, when we feel empty or depressed, we tend to attribute it to the many challenges and hardships we believe are unresolved in our lives. In truth, the core reason for our feelings of worthlessness emanates from our inability to love ourselves, to have self-compassion and to find the true resilience from within. The Midrash in Bereshit Rabbah (1:14) explains the meaning of this verse: “For it is not an empty thing for you, for it is your life” (Devarim 32:47): יא רמי, מענה אתה – if your life feels empty, it is because of your inner emptiness!

The Holy Spirit drawn from the waters of the Beit HaShoeva was our own spirit, empowered and inspired by G-d. Only when we dare to believe in ourselves, and in the spark of holiness within our souls, can we attain the level of authentic, internal and everlasting happiness. These waters of the Beit HaShoeva served as a mirror to help us reflect on our inner spiritual strength, which is the root of our security and resilience, and for that reason, Hillel exclaimed: “If I’m here, everything is here, and if I’m not here, who is here?”

Our challenge this year is to develop a true inner joy based not on our external assets but rather on our faith and inner resilience. During the past few months, many of us have experienced a feeling that our world is collapsing. We have experienced enormous uncertainty, financial challenges, lockdown, illness, and the loss of dear relatives and friends. The pandemic has shut down everything that usually provides us with a sense of security and happiness. The loneliness of social distancing has affected our sense of belonging, which is an acute and primal emotional need. This year, perhaps Sukkot can give us an opportunity to recalibrate our lives according to Hillel’s teaching. While most external factors are beyond our control, we still have the ability to work on our personal growth, practicing authenticity and self-compassion, and developing the muscles of resilience and belonging.

Especially this year, Sukkot is our opportunity to recognize our most authentic place in the world. When we pick up the Arba Minim, we say: “Let it be recognized that I am called by the Name of Hashem.” The Sfat Emet explained this verse by saying: “The wisdom (da’at) that descends on us on Sukkot lies within our ability to recognize our unique place in the world” (Sukkot 5657).

Do we have the courage to leverage the challenges of COVID-19 to find our inner resilience and happiness?

“[Hillel] used to say: If I am not for me, who will be for me? And when I am for myself alone, what am I? And if not now, then when?” (Avot 1:14)
Why the Eighth Day?

How many days is Sukkot? The Torah describes it as a seven-day holiday (Vayikra 23, Bamidbar 29, Devarim 16), and yet the pesukim add an eighth day as an עצרת, literally “stopping” or “gathering.” What is the nature of this eighth day? Why is Sukkot described as lasting seven days, if it actually lasts eight?

Indeed, Talmudic Sages debate whether we say the beracha of shehecheyanu on Shemini Atzeret (Sukkah 47b). The Gemara concludes we do say it because Shemini Atzeret is considered its own holiday in several different respects.

In Pesikta deRav Kahana (28), Rav Alexander says that by using extra letters in the pesukim regarding the sacrifices of each day of Sukkot, G-d hints to Am Yisrael to pray for rain. After Sukkot passes and we still have not taken the hint, G-d gives us a whole day just to pray for rain. The special prayer for rain, תפילת הגשם, is in fact recited on Shemini Atzeret. According to this view, Shemini Atzeret amplifies a theme latent during Sukkot, and that theme moves to center stage on the eighth day.

What are the Sukkot sacrifices? On each day, we offer bulls on the mizbeach — 13 on the first day, 12 on the second, 11 on the third, and so on. But then the pattern breaks — we offer seven bulls on the seventh day of Sukkot, but just one on Shemini Atzeret. Why? Rabbi Elazar explains that the 70 bulls offered over Sukkot correspond to the 70 nations of the world, one offered on behalf of each nation. Shemini Atzeret’s sacrifice, of one bull, symbolizes G-d’s asking His beloved nation for just a small meal to enjoy. The Midrash in Bamidbar Rabbah slightly modifies this: G-d is like a king who invites all his subjects to a seven-day feast, and afterward says to his most beloved servant, “Let us enjoy whatever you can find, a bit of meat, fish, or vegetables.” According to this idea, Sukkot is a universal holiday while Shemini Atzeret is only for the Jewish people. A modest holiday just to celebrate G-d’s special relationship with His beloved people.

Rashi (Vayikra 23:36) cites the following: “I have stopped you with Me, like a king who invited his sons to a meal for a certain number of days. When the time came to part, he asked his children, ‘Please stay with me one more day, קasha Pareidacem — your departure is difficult for me.’” All of Sukkot is a holiday for G-d to enjoy with His children, the Jewish people. But as we find when we say goodbye to our own children, it’s hard to see them go — so Hashem adds Shemini Atzeret because it’s so difficult for Him to see us go after Sukkot.

Let us now return to our original question as debated by the Amoraim: Should we recite shehecheyanu on Shemini Atzeret or not? If its main theme is to pray for rain — which we theoretically should have done on Sukkot — it is debatable whether it warrants its own shehecheyanu. One could argue that no new blessing is necessary, since rain is a theme that exists on Sukkot through the pouring of the water on the altar and the hints to pray for rain throughout those days. On the other hand, rain is emphasized more prominently on Shemini Atzeret. If Shemini Atzeret is a holiday purely for the Jewish people, after the universal holiday of Sukkot, we can understand why it warrants its own shehecheyanu. However, as Rashi writes, if Shemini Atzeret is an added day to Sukkot, just to stay a bit longer, why is that considered a new holiday? Isn’t it just a continuation of the previous seven days?

Perhaps the nature of Shemini Atzeret is exactly that. It’s a day that celebrates our unique, emotional relationship with G-d, in that He loves us and does not want to see us go. It actually is a separate day — a day that celebrates our close bond with G-d as His chosen, beloved people.

Hence it does not simply add a day to Sukkot, but creates a unique day, one that deserves its own shehecheyanu, so we can focus on feeling that closeness to G-d, which will keep us going in the winter months ahead.

We are uniquely commanded to be beSimcha, to rejoice and to be happy on Chag HaSukkot. When the sukkah goes up, the decorations adorn its walls, and we eagerly move from our permanent residence to our temporary one, we are enveloped by a natural feeling of excitement and joy. The feelings of warmth that permeate our homes and hearts are specific to this festival.

It is this visceral feeling of dwelling with G-d that leads to the simcha of Sukkot.

“You shall make the festival of Sukkot for a seven day period, when you gather in from your threshing floor and from your wine pit, And you shall rejoice on your festival… A seven day period shall you celebrate to Hashem, your G-d… and you shall be only joyous” (Devarim 16:13-15).

Only in regard to Sukkot are we commanded to not only rejoice but to doubly rejoice! Elsewhere, in regard to Sukkot, the Torah commands us regarding the mitzvah objects of the chag:

“And you shall take for yourselves on the first day the fruit of a tree of splendor, fronds of date palms, and branches of a cordlike tree, and brook willows; and you shall rejoice before Hashem, your G-d, for a seven-day period” (Vayikra 23:40).

From this pasuk, Rav Elimelech Biederman learns an important and beautiful insight. The mitzvah deOraita (Biblically ordained commandment) to take the Four Species on Sukkot is a mitzvah only for the first day of the chag: “and you shall take for yourselves on the first day…” However, the mitzvah deOraita to be beSimcha, to rejoice and be only happy, is a mitzvah for all seven days of the chag!

Hence, we deduce from here that the mitzvah of simchat yomtov on Sukkot is greater than the mitzvah of taking the Arba Minim!

As the world around us today is storming, and life for our nation and our Land is not easy during turbulent times, it is an avodah we must all engage in: imbuing the midda of simcha, and the ability to rejoice, into our very selves.

Rabbi Avraham Pam taught that, “Helping others is the formula for a life of simcha. The theme of Sukkot is that one must leave his permanent dwelling – his own mind – and settle in a temporary dwelling – thinking of the needs of others. In doing so, he will find contentment in his own life and will enjoy a year-round zman simchateinu.”

When we live with the knowledge that G-d is the Source of our simcha, and we care for others as we have been commanded (Devarim 16:14, as quoted above), we will truly merit a Sukkot of unbridled, pure and holy joy!

Sukkot reminds us of the Clouds of Glory in which G-d ensconced us when we left Egypt (Vayikra 23:43), and the protection He provides to us in each and every generation. This protection reminds us that our true security lies not in the walls of our homes of bricks and stone, but in the embrace of G-d’s love for us.

Rabbi J. B. Soloveitchik teaches that “Man is basically a homeless being. No matter how large and opulent his home, he is exposed. He is subject to the vicissitudes of life, subject to nature – which at best is indifferent to man, at worst is hostile – and subject to an inscrutable future. There is only one home where man gains security: G-d is called מעונה (Devarim 33:27). The only home where man can find security is in the Ribono Shel Olam, the Master of the World.”

For the last month, since the beginning of Elul, we have been reciting Psalm 27 – לְדָוִד ה' אוֹרִי וְיִשְׁעִי – on a daily basis. We will continue to do so until Shemini Atzeret the very end of the Sukkot holiday. The practice first appeared in the prayer book of Rabbi Marskov, a disciple of the Ba’al Shem Tov and in halachic works such as the Mateh Ephraim by Rabbi Ephraim Zalman Margulies (1762-1828).

Elements of this psalm are reminiscent of the themes of this time of the year. For example, the Midrash (Tehilim 27:4) writes: “Our Sages have explained the verse as related to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. אוֹרִי (my light) – on Rosh Hashanah which is the Day of Judgement as it states “and let your justice and judgment shine forth like the midday sun” (Psalms 37:6), that He will save us and forgive us, and יִשְׁעִי (my salvation) on Yom Kippur, that He will save us and forgive all our sins.

Yet another hint is found in the mention of “sukkah” in verse five: “For on the day of trouble He will conceal me in His sukkah; He will hide me in the shelter of His tent and set me high upon a rock.”

Let us look at this verse in greater detail. First of all, what is this sukkah?

The Ibn Ezra states it is Jerusalem, based on the verse “and His sukkah will be in Shalem (one of the names of Jerusalem) and His dwelling in Zion” (Psalms 76:3). Rashi narrows the area down specifically to the Beit HaMikdash. He ties it to a historical event, where Yoash, the son of Achaziah, was in fact hidden in the Temple for six years to save him from the wrath of Atalia, the queen who succeeded in killing the remaining royal children. Other commentaries look at the phrase as a more general one referring to G-d’s protection, similar to the opinion of Rabbi Eliezer (Sukkah 11b and codified in the Shulchan Aruch) as to why we sit in sukkot, i.e. to remind us of G-d’s protection via the “clouds of glory” (ananei haKavod).

When does G-d conceal us in His sukkah? A simple translation would be “on a bad day,” but it can also mean a day of bad as in a “day of trouble.” I feel it is likely that over the last six months, people have felt it is one יום רע בברק after another in light of the ongoing Covid-19 pandemic. However, in Yirmiyahu (17:17–18, 51:2), the phrase has a positive connotation. It is when punishment will be brought down on evildoers and thus it is actually a good day if you are righteous.

Hiding and concealing are also concepts with dual meaning. Both sins such as idol worship (see Devarim 13:7 and 27:15) and actions of which one is ashamed are associated with hiding (see Devarim 27:24). On the other hand, a hidden place is described as the dwelling place of Hashem (Psalms 91:1).

Such double meaning is appropriate for such confusing times. Perhaps we can learn from them that all things that seem bad may, perhaps, have a good side to them. Alongside the damage of this pandemic to lives and livelihoods, there have been areas of growth as well. And even if the situation is truly bad, G-d is there to protect us from it being even worse. Therefore, the image of G-d protecting us during such troubling times is one worth repeating twice daily as we approach the holiday of Sukkot. If this Sukkot we will be “hiding” in our sukkah with just our immediate family, may we hope that next year we can all celebrate in G-d’s Sukkah of Jerusalem and the Beit HaMikdash.

The Sages tell us that Ya'akov wished to reveal the keitz, the time of the final redemption, to his sons, but it was concealed from him. So he blessed them instead.

The Midrash gives the following analogy. A confidant of the king was dying and called his children to his bedside to reveal the royal secrets the king had confided to him. As he was about to begin, he saw that the king too was standing at his bedside. Instead of his intended message, he immediately substituted an exhortation to his children to be careful to honor the king properly. Similarly, Ya'akov wished to reveal the secrets of Mashiach, but saw the Shechina at his bedside and substituted the blessings out of embarrassment.

This Midrash seems to imply that Ya'akov did not forget the keitz but simply suppressed it due to embarrassment. Further, how do Ya'akov’s blessings compare to an exhortation to obey the king and honor him?

The Talmud (Yoma 20b) says that prior to death, the soul gives a scream that is heard from one end of the world to the other. Rabbi Chaim of Volozhin explains that before one passes from this world, G-d shows him a picture of what he could have been had he developed all his potential and contrasts it to what he actually achieved. When the soul sees the chasm between these two images, it screams.

Why is that scream described as going “from one end of the world to the other end,” and not “from the beginning of the world to the end”? There is a dispute between Rav and Shmuel in the Talmud (Megillah) as to whether the provinces of Hodu and Kush were at opposite ends of the world, or right next to each other. The Vilna Gaon explains that both are true, for any two points on a globe that are next to each other when traveling eastward are at opposite ends of the world when traveling westward. Hence if a point on the globe is only seen as a point, it is insignificant, but if it is seen as the beginning of a far-off end, it encompasses an entire world.

Talents, abilities and capabilities are points of potential. But if they remain an end in themselves, they are insignificant points. The soul cries for the failure of these points to grow and traverse entire worlds.

The development and perfection of this world depend on the realization of each Jew’s individual potential. It is in this perspective that the world was created for the names of the Jewish people.

The confidant reflected that if he told his children the king’s mysteries, they would know this information only secondhand. But if he could inspire them to be careful in honoring the king, they would merit to become confidants of the king themselves and hear his secrets firsthand. Similarly, Ya’akov wished to reveal the keitz to his children. But after realizing their inherent potential, he chose to impart to them that which would obviate the keitz and bring the redemption closer.

The greatest blessing one can bestow is to enlighten another and acquaint him with himself. The Mishnah (Avot 3:18) says: “Man is precious, having been created in G-d’s image, and even more so for having been informed he was created in G-d’s image.” Self-knowledge of one’s abilities and talents, as well as one’s shortcomings and limitations, is the greatest blessing. It enables us to realize our Divine mission in this world.

Ya’akov realized the ultimate redemption depended on the development of his sons’ potential. Rather than reveal the deadline for redemption, he opted to bless them with self-knowledge that could help them bring the redemption at a much earlier date. In this vein, knowledge of the capabilities they possessed was itself a blessing.

The Midrash relates that every person has various names: the one G-d gives him, that which his parents give him, the name he is called by his friends, and above all the one he earns for himself. Everyone is endowed with a variety of talents and skills. Some are directly endowed by Heaven. Some are the result of heredity and environment. But the most significant are those that come by virtue of developing and actualizing one’s potential.

As we end the Torah, may we strengthen ourselves to develop the unique potential inherent in our names for the furtherance and enhancement of Torah and the Jewish people, and thereby bring the Final Redemption speedily in our days.

Rabbi Zev Leff serves as the Rav of Moshav Matityahu.
The completion of any significant portion of Torah learning is always an occasion for celebration. Any siyum (completion of a tractate of Talmud or Mishna) is usually accompanied by a festive meal to commemorate the happy event. There is a great sense of satisfaction and accomplishment at having seen a difficult intellectual and time-consuming task to its successful conclusion.

Therefore, it is naturally understandable that the occasion of our completing the annual cycle of Torah readings with the reading of Vezot HaBracha on the final day of Sukkot makes it the most joyful day of the entire magnificent holiday season. Simchat Torah affirms our faith in Jewish continuity and our unshakable belief in the Divinity of the Torah Moshe brought down to Israel from Mount Sinai.

It is the holiday basically created by the Jewish people itself, replete with customs and nuances developed over the ages that have hardened into accepted practice and ritual. Here in Israel, where Simchat Torah and Shemini Atzeret occur on the same day, Simchat Torah, the folk holiday, has almost pushed Shemini Atzeret, the Biblical and halachic holiday, aside in thought and practice.

This is a practical example of how sometimes Jewish custom based upon intense love of and attachment to Torah overwhelms the Torah ritual itself. What makes Simchat Torah so special is the fact we begin to read immediately from the beginning of the Torah again, symbolizing no gaps in our study or our devotion to it. This is usually the case with all siyum ceremonies, in which the completion of one tractate immediately leads to the beginning of the study of another one.

However, despite the elation, the Torah ends on an apparently sad note, poignantly describing the death of our great teacher Moshe. He will never enter the Land of Israel but will only be able to glimpse it from afar. The generation he shepherded for 40 years has passed away, his sons will not inherit his position or power, and with his great gift of prophecy, he is aware of the terrible problems his beloved people of Israel must yet face and overcome through their long journey of history and destiny.

Nevertheless, the joy of the presence of the Torah within our nation overcomes these feelings of melancholy. As long as Moshe’s words and ideals still live amongst the Jewish people there is great reason to rejoice. It means we have not lost our way and the eternity of Moshe and Israel is guaranteed. The nations of the world resent the fact we still have a chance to rejoice or attempt to live normal productive lives under terrible duress and distress.

Simchat Torah comes to teach us that we should rejoice when we are able to do so and celebrate our existence and accomplishments even if things are not exactly as we would wish them to be. Completing the Torah reading is a matter of perseverance, as is all of Jewish life.

The Torah’s description of Moshe’s death is meant to impress us with the fact that Judaism is not the cult of the personality. Even when Moshe, the greatest ever Jew ever, dies and leaves us bereft and alone, we are not to overly mourn and certainly not to despair.

We may yet continue to rejoice because the eternal Torah is still present within us with great vigor and vitality. As far as we are concerned, the game is never over. We suffer and fall but we are never defeated. That is the power the Torah grants us. It is the source of our great joy in celebrating the completion and simultaneous beginning of the reading of the Torah this year. So be it for all of the years yet to come.

One of the qualities of our postmodern world is the constant state of flux. Things move rapidly. People and ideas change. Old accepted concepts are challenged, rejected, transformed and reinterpreted. It is a world in which boundaries have disappeared. Social scientists might describe our postmodern existence as a state of constant liminality: we are consciously, constantly, on the threshold of a new reality.1

What does all this have to do with our religious experience or the experience of the holidays? In “Transforming Worship,” author Timothy L. Carson describes Ya’akov’s vision of the ladder ascending to Heaven (p. 61): “Jacob’s dream floats somewhere in the sacred axis between heaven and earth.” While much of Carson’s analysis would be foreign to the traditional Jew, his observation of the liminality of the scene in which Ya’akov, in a dream state, observes a passage from earth to heaven and back again, is an important insight. What Carson fails to observe is the decidedly non-liminal conclusion of the scene. We as readers, and Ya’akov himself, take away a decidedly different sort of message from the vision, recasting the vision into what can only be described as a preliminal state of consciousness.

Indeed, Ya’akov lives in a preliminal state. The Land promised to him never quite becomes his; only in the future will his descendants inherit and inhabit it. He understands that his task is to lay the groundwork, but he personally will not cross the threshold.

As Moshe prepares to take his leave from the nation, they stand poised to cross the threshold into a completely new reality as a nation in its own land. Moshe’s speech begins with what we may call spiritual geopolitics: G-d created clearly defined borders for the nations of the world, affording each its own space — but this overarching division reflects something particular to the descendants of Ya’akov. In Bereishit (Chapter 46), the Torah tells us the sum total of Ya’akov’s family that migrated to Egypt during the great famine was 70. Corresponding to this number, Jewish tradition refers to the totality of humankind as “the 70 nations of the world,” all descended from Noah after the flood. The peoples of the world were divided — linguistically, culturally and geographically — when they misused their unity to rebel against G-d in the aftermath of the great deluge.

In contrast, Moshe refers to the Jewish people as Ya’akov and the foundational experience of Jewish nationhood is depicted in a desolate wilderness, a place without borders, in which they are surrounded by G-d alone. The Torah describes the Jews being “encompassed,” which the commentaries understand as the Divine protection afforded by the Clouds of Glory.

The sukkah is a modest structure, with no real boundaries. The walls may be made of wood, fabric, or even bits of string. The sukkah is a halachic construct, a philosophical construct if you will. Therefore, the walls need not be real barriers of brick and mortar. A set of strings tied three handbreadths apart is enough to create a theoretical wall according to halacha, and that is enough to make a sukkah “kosher.”

Perhaps the sukkah is the antithesis of the postmodern state of liminality: We are commanded to create boundaries, to mark off both physical and philosophical borders. There are absolutes, and we are commanded to acknowledge and respect them. Common wisdom understands that children need rules in order to thrive and to make sense of the world around them; this is no less true of adults. We need borders and boundaries. Not everything is negotiable, subject to subjective reinterpretation. Things need firmness. The postmodern rejection of historical fact in favor of subjective narrative flies in the face of truth, and of Torah.

As Jews, we live in a world of absolutes, yet we are commanded by the same Torah that creates the boundaries never to forget that we are part of a larger world. We have Torah-mandated responsibility for those within the camp, as well as for those who remain beyond the philosophical and physical borders we construct.

1 Liminality is a term used to describe the psychological process of transitioning across boundaries and borders.

The “Flimsy” Davidic Dynasty?

On Sukkot, an enigmatic line is added near the end of Birkat HaMazon: חַדַּרְמָן הוּא יָקִים לָנוּ את סֻכַּת דוֹד הָנַפֶּלֶת – may the Merciful One restore the fallen sukkah of David. While this short prayer has become a popular song, its meaning and place in the Sukkot liturgy is far from clear.

The origin of the phrase is Amos 9:11, part of Amos’ glorious epilogue of hope depicting the golden End of Days. The prophecy speaks of G-d raising up Sukkat David, closing up its breaches, raising up its ruins, and building it like in the good old days. The prophecy continues (v. 13) with the famous image of the plowman overtaking the reaper and the treader of grapes meeting the one who plants seeds, and the mountains dripping with sweet wine. Truly a beautiful vision, but it is not clear what the hapax legomenon Sukkat David refers to. Most traditional commentators assume it refers to the Davidic dynasty’s rule over a united kingdom, as Amos was prophesying when there was a divided kingdom while the Temple still stood in Jerusalem and the Ten Tribes had not yet been exiled. Nonetheless, others interpret the phrase as referring variously to the Mikdash, Yerushalayim, or the Shechina.

Irrespective of its original intent is the question of how and why it entered the Sukkot liturgy. The list of HaRachamans that we say at the conclusion of Birkat HaMazon are post-Talmudic, first appearing in the Rishonim period. Yet the Sukkot addition was still not included. It is not that people were not familiar with the verse from Amos. It was used, and continues to be used, poetically in rabbinic literature.³

The phrase from Amos did enter the liturgy in about the 12th century in a context not connected to Sukkot – and seemingly later falling into disuse – in an Ashkenazi Motzei Shabbat piyut recently printed from manuscript (by Rabbi Yaakov Yisrael Stal in a Torah journal called Segula vol. 14, Tammuz 5780).

The earliest mention of reciting this HaRachaman on Sukkot seems to be the 17th century, when it was mentioned by Rav Jousep Schammes (1604-1678) in his book of customs of the Worms community and by Rav Eliyahu Spira (1660–1712) in his Eliyahu Rabbah. Neither of these early sources provides an explanation as to the connection between the Sukkat David and the holiday of Sukkot. The parsimonious explanation is simply the appearance of the word sukkah in the eschatological verse and hence its easy integration and acceptance in the Sukkot liturgy.

Rav Yehuda Amital, in explaining the Maharal, says that in general a monarchy is termed bayit, as in beit David, owing to its strength. But a house has an additional characteristic. If it falls down and is rebuilt it is no longer the same entity. If one makes a vow to not benefit from a house, if that house falls down and is rebuilt the person may benefit, as it is now a new house (Ran, Nedarim 7a). Conceptually, a sukkah is different. A sukkah is easily knocked down, but owing to its inherently flimsy nature, it is considered the same sukkah when rebuilt. Such is the way with the Jewish people and with the Davidic dynasty – they have been blown around and knocked down by the vicissitudes of history, but they are rebuilt.

The rebuilt country of Israel in the Land of Israel is not a new entity, but rather a continuation of the previous sukkah that stood here. So too, when the Gemara (Sanhedrin 96b) says the verse in Amos is referencing the Mashiach, it will not be a new dynasty, but a restoration of the same Davidic dynasty.

The inclusion of this request based on the verse from Amos specifically on Sukkot may be related to its immediately following Yom Kippur. The Davidic dynasty endures because King David – unlike King Shaul – was able to admit he sinned and repented. Having just come through Yom Kippur, we as a nation are saying to G-d that we can emulate King David in that regard, and therefore are deserving to have his dynasty, the Sukkat David, and the Temple, restored in our renewed country.

1 A term of which only one instance of use is recorded.
2 For example, the 11th-century Machzor Vitry, when mentioning Tisha B’Av, invokes this optimistic verse from Amos. Similarly, the 15th century Leket Yosher concludes his introduction with this verse of optimism.

And God said to Yehoshua, ‘See I have given you Yericho...and you shall go around the city...encircle the city once. Thus you shall do for six days...On the seventh day you shall go around the city seven times’...So they did for six days... on the seventh day... they went around the city in this manner seven times’ (Yehoshua 6).

Can one read these words and not immediately picture the Hoshanot we recite throughout Sukkot? Why is Sukkot the time we reenact the Jewish people’s conquest of Yericho?

Rabbeinu Bachya explains that circling Yericho demonstrated we were not going to be influenced by the spiritual contamination of the inhabitants of the city, and by extension those who lived in the Land of Israel. The Yericho-like imagery of the circling of the bima on Sukkot comes to remind us that one of the goals of the holiday is to combat the negative spiritual impact of the “70 nations of the world,” as symbolized by the 70 special Sukkot sacrifices offered in decreasing order.

When Israel was divided among the tribes, 500 square amot of Yericho, the precise size of the Temple Mount, was designated for the tribe that would host the Beit HaMikdash (Sifri Beha’alotcha 81). The Gemara (Taanit 27a) teaches that when each of the 24 groups of Kohanim had their two-week rotation to serve, half went to Yerushalayim to work in the Beit HaMikdash and half went to Yericho to secure food and water for the half working in the Mikdash.

The Mishna (Tamid 3:8) lists nine sounds that emanated from the Beit HaMikdash – including the shofar blasts and the songs of the Levi'im – and were heard in Yericho. Similarly, the fragrance of the incense burnt in the Beit HaMikdash could be smelled in Yericho. The Raavad explains that the sounds were not heard and the fragrance could not be smelled by any of the cities between Yerushalayim and Yericho. They miraculously reached Yericho, and Yericho alone.

The Raavad teaches that just like before eating the crops of Israel one must separate teruma for the Kohanim, Yericho was the first city captured upon entering Israel and it is sanctified as teruma for God. This can explain why Yehoshua forbade anyone to take the spoils of Yericho for their personal use. Just like the holiness of the Beit HaMikdash meant items belonging to it could not be taken and used by individuals, the same applied to Yericho.

But didn’t Rabbeinu Bachya teach that Yericho represented the spiritual contamination of the inhabitants of the Land of Israel? How can it be holy like Yerushalayim and the Beit HaMikdash?

When walking around the city seven times, the people were led by the Aron, which carried the luchot, as they encircled the city. The act of simply following the Aron, while walking in circles as our first act upon entering the Land of Israel, demonstrated our recognition that we enter the Land to follow the Torah and gain the spiritual benefits of the Land. In doing so, we combat all impurities in the physical land and elevate it to high spiritual levels.

Sukkot is the holiday during which we ask God for rain and success with the coming year’s crops. This focus on physical hopes and aspirations always runs the risk of pulling us away from God and spirituality. Thus, while asking God for rain during the Hoshanot ceremony, we reenact what our ancestors did before conquering Yericho, elevating it from the lowest levels of contamination to the highest levels of spirituality akin to Jerusalem and the Beit HaMikdash. This reminds us that as we pray for physical blessings in the Land of Israel, the ultimate goal of this physical success is to enable us to focus on reaping the spiritual blessings this Land has to offer the Jewish people.

As we circle the bima with our lulav and etrog and beg God to bless the Land of Israel with a successful rainy season, let us remember that the goal of physical blessings in the Land of Israel is to help us focus on Torah, mitzvot, and to become a holy people, experiencing a close relationship with God.
From a Place of Purity to a Place of Peace

Anyone who has ever been to Jerusalem in the days between Yom Kippur and Sukkot will testify to a unique energy in the air. The city is abuzz. The excitement is palpable, as people fill the streets and flood the markets, buying the Arba Minim, supplies for their sukkah, and food for the holiday.

Many have the custom to begin building their sukkah immediately after Yom Kippur. After fasting and praying all day, they eat something and get right to work — going from one mitzvah to the next — not delaying or missing the opportunity. It’s a labor of love, which expresses the desire to translate the inspiration of the past 25 hours into action. There is something magical that takes place on these moonlit Jerusalem rooftops and balconies. It’s an intense ending to an intense day.

Curiously, the custom to begin building one’s sukkah immediately following Yom Kippur is cited by the Rema twice: once in the last section of the Laws of Yom Kippur, and then again in the first section of the Laws of Sukkot.

Why does the Rema — always meticulous in his comments — cite this custom twice? And what is the reason for this practice? Can’t the sukkah wait till tomorrow?

The first time the Rema records the minhag, he mentions “those scrupulous in observance (hamedakdikim) begin building immediately...” The Mishnah Berurah interprets this to imply that everyone else begins the next day. That is why the custom is mentioned twice. Once for those who begin at night, and once for those who begin the next day. However, that answer is difficult to accept because the Maharil (Minhagim, Hil. Sukkot) writes that immediately following Yom Kippur “every individual” should be involved in building the sukkah. Every individual — not just those scrupulous in their observance!

Perhaps there is a deeper answer.

By building the sukkah immediately after Yom Kippur, we recognize the intimate connection between Sukkot and the days that immediately precede it. By mentioning the custom in both the Laws of Yom Kippur and again in the Laws of Sukkot, the Rema stresses this connection.

According to Rabbi Shlomo Kluger (Chochnat Shlomo, Orach Chayim 625:1), we begin building the sukkah right after Yom Kippur, as G-d, so to speak, covers our sins on Yom Kippur and on Sukkot He covers us with His sukkah.

The intimate connection between the Days of Awe and Sukkot is also deeply rooted in our historical experience. According to one opinion, the sukkah represents the Clouds of Glory, which protected the Jewish people in the wilderness. But after the Sin of the Golden Calf, the Clouds of Glory were removed. On Yom Kippur, the Jewish people were forgiven for the Sin of the Golden Calf, and the Clouds of Glory returned.

The Vilna Gaon writes that Sukkot commemorates the return of the Clouds of Glory and with them, the Divine Presence. This is why Sukkot is celebrated at this time of year, immediately following Yom Kippur.

Once Sukkot begins, we are surrounded by mitzvot — an expression of our closeness to G-d. We carry the lulav through the streets, raised like a banner, expressing confidence that we were victorious in judgment just a few days ago.

And while we are required to rejoice during every festival, Sukkot is especially joyous. In fact, Sukkot is called the “time of our rejoicing.” It is the very paradigm of joyful celebration — the “Chag.” That joy is a result of the closeness we feel to G-d, achieved during Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur.

As we sit in the sukkah, the Divine Presence surrounds us. In Chassidic thought, it is a symbol of G-d’s love. The Sefat Emet compares the sukkah to a chuppah, a wedding canopy. It is the canopy under which the Jewish nation is wed to G-d. The sukkah is also an embrace. According to halacha, the sukkah must have at least two walls and a handbreadth of a third. The two walls and a handbreadth are imagined as an arm providing a great big Divine hug.

And after having gone through the Days of Awe — isn’t that all we need?

Rabbi Shimshon HaKohen Nadel lives and teaches in Jerusalem, where he serves as Mara D’atra of Har Nof’s Kehilat Zichron Yosef.
Renewing our Faith

Sukkot is the festival of faith, and by leaving our homes and dwelling in a sukkah under the natural šchach, we demonstrate our faith in G-d. In fact, the Zohar (Emor 103a) actually refers to the šchach’s shade as לְחַדֵּשׁ בָּהּ דָּבָר – the protective shade of faith. With this in mind, I would like to explore one of the elements of faith. With this in mind, I would like to explore one of the halachot of the šchach, and thereby consider how we should relate to our faith.

The Mishna (Sukkah 1:1, 9a) presents a disagreement regarding the halachic validity of a sukkah yeshana (literally, an old sukkah) – a sukkah on which šchach has sat for over 30 days and which had not expressly been placed there for the sake of the upcoming Sukkot festival. According to Beit Shammai, this ‘old’ šchach is invalid and must be renewed, while Beit Hillel permits the use of ‘old’ šchach.

However, while we follow the position of Beit Hillel, the Yerushalmi (Sukkah 1:2, 4b) stipulates that some minor act of חִדְדְשׁוּת (renewal) must still be performed on a small section of the ‘old’ šchach.

Admittedly, this requirement is not evident from the conclusion in the Gemara, and hence the Rambam and the Rif make no reference to performing any renewal act on ‘old’ šchach. However, there are other authorities1 who state that the Yerushalmi’s demand להדש בָּהּ דָּבָר – to renew an element of [the šchach] – is an absolute requirement.

Finally, there is an opinion2 that while a renewal act should, lechatchila, be performed on ‘old’ šchach to demonstrate the intentionality of using it for the mitzvah, this is not an absolute requirement. In light of this debate, common practice is to shake or momentarily lift a small section of ‘old’ šchach as an act of renewal.

While šchach – which reminds us of how G-d protected Bnei Yisrael as they journeyed through the wilderness, and whose shade represents the protective shade of faith – can technically fulfill its function as a reminder of faith even if it has been sitting on a sukkah for more than 30 days, its long-term presence can often mean we forget its core message. Consequently, we are required (according to some), and strongly encouraged (according to others), to perform a renewal act on the šchach to ensure we haven’t forgotten what the šchach is meant to teach us spiritually.

Just as ‘old’ šchach needs a renewal act to help us remember its function and message, so people of faith can at times forget what it means to have faith, because anything perpetually present in our lives runs the risk of us taking it for granted and forgetting its core message.

So, while we shake or momentarily lift up a small part of the šchach as an act of renewal, what sort of renewal act should we be performing on our own faith?

Faith, like šchach, is often fragile. Faith, like šchach, is always porous. The mistake we sometimes make is viewing faith as if it was a solid concrete building with a watertight roof. But this is a misnomer. Faith is not comparable to a solid house, and faith is not ‘watertight.’ Instead, faith is like a sukkah whose test of strength is whether it can stay standing in response to a רוח מցויה (literally, ‘a typical wind,’ but which also translates as ‘the current spirit of the times’),3 and whose roof – which represents the protective shade of faith – can protect its inhabitants notwithstanding the fact it is both fragile and porous to the elements.

Just like the šchach is shaken or momentarily lifted as an act of renewal, our faith can be renewed either when we have undergone a challenging experience that has ‘shaken’ us, or been through an experience that has ‘lifted’ us. And why? Because by having either of these experiences, we are reminded that faith is not something that is fixed but is, instead, something that can be moved and renewed.

And this is why, if your sukkah has had šchach on its roof for over 30 days, you need to move it. By doing so, it will remind you that true faith must be something that moves you too.

Why is it that Pesach – rather than Sukkot – is known as the holiday when Jews relive and recreate their past? On Sukkot, we are commanded to take our furniture out of our house and eat and sleep for seven days in a hut covered only by schach, braving the elements, just as our ancestors did in the desert. The beraita in Masechet Sukkah elaborates and says we must do all of our activities in the sukkah. The obligation to reenact on Sukkot is more encompassing in both time (seven days vs. one for most Pesach mitzvot) and scope (all of life’s activities vs. just eating). If observed correctly, Sukkot seems to be a far more intense recreation of our past history than Pesach. So why all the fanfare for Pesach?

Perhaps the answer can be found by solving another apparent mystery that separates the two chagim. Concerning Pesach, the Mishna states: “On this night one is obligated to imagine themselves as if they were personally leaving Egypt.” On Seder Night, one must also bring one’s imagination in addition to all the required physical items (Pesach, Matzah and Maror). Just eating matzah and maror, even LeShem Mitzvah, would not fulfill one’s obligation. Rather, one must use one’s imaginative faculties to actually envision oneself as if I personally was leaving Egypt.

In contrast, despite the intense demands of “living 24/7 in the sukkah,” we are not asked to use our imagination. Eating and sleeping in the sukkah without imagining you are in a hut in the Sinai Desert having just left Egypt is just fine. Why then, if the Torah goes to such lengths to recreate the Sukkot experience of the midbar, does it leave out the clincher? Namely, our obligation to imagine we are part of Klal Yisrael journeying through the desert, as we are obligated to envisage on Pesach?

Pesach and Sukkot evoke very different internal narratives and emphasize very different types of spiritual growth. Pesach is a holiday that emphasizes a one-time event that cannot and will not ever be duplicated. The ahava between Klal Yisrael and G-d expressed on the night of Yetziat Mitzrayim was so intense and powerful that it echoes through time. Once a year, the Torah demands we try our best to “remember” that special night using physical activities to arouse our imagination and connect with this moment. We are obligated to do our best to escape our present reality and go back to a time many years ago. By going back and touching that distant moment – albeit in our imagination – we are fulfilling the Avodat HaYom (the duty of the day) of feeling the echoes of that incomparable event.

On Sukkot, however, we are not asked to leave our present reality at all. The powerful recreations of Sukkot are not meant to jar our imagination and transfer us to a distant past. Sukkot does not demand זיכרון, remembrance, but ידיעת, knowledge. In fact, the recreations of Sukkot are not reenactments at all. They are so real they are actually reality.

We do not have to imagine our past to feel the internal messages of Sukkot. We are asked to simply be sensitive to our present reality. For sitting in a sukkah circa 2020 is just the same as sitting in a sukkah circa 3300 BCE. Both cases involve sitting in a flimsy temporary shelter (רדרת ערא) open to the elements, aware of our tenuous physical existence in עולם הזה, in this world, which is ultimately an עולם ערא, a transient world dependent upon G-d. There is no need for imagination or connecting to a borrowed experience from our collective past.

All that is necessary for Sukkot is openhearted existential awareness of the present. It is through that openness we are to connect to G-d by embracing our present and the ever-present connection to Hashem built into the fabric of life. Sukkot represents the timelessness of our connection to G-d while Pesach is all about a moment in time.

The Gemara (Shabbat) tells us that when Moshe Rabbeinu went up to Har Sinai, the malachim (angels) confronted him, complaining that G-d was giving the Torah to Moshe and not to them. Moshe responds, “It says in Your Torah, ‘I am the L-rd your G-d who brought you out of the land of Egypt.’ Angels, were you taken out of Egypt? It says in Your Torah don’t worship other gods. Angels, do you ever have a desire to worship other gods? It says in the Torah ‘honor your father and your mother.’ Angels, do you have parents? It says in the Torah ‘don’t kill, don’t steal, don’t covet.’ Angels. Do these apply to you?”

The Gemara says the angels recognized the truth of Moshe’s argument and gave the Torah to him with no complaints. They even gave him gifts on his way down.

Many commentaries ask, what were the malachim thinking? They knew what it said in the Torah, they knew who it was for and yet they still wanted it. Why?

Some commentaries suggest the malachim knew the Torah existed on many different levels. פַּרְדֵּס stands for דָּרַשׁ וְסוֹד, רֶמֶז, פָּשַׁט. Four different levels of interpretation, from the simple to the mystically sublime. The angels recognized that the pshat, the simple interpretation, didn’t apply to them. But they wanted to have the Torah in order to appreciate the deeper ideas. The Gemara answers that, yes, the deeper ideas and all the different levels are significant, but only if you live by the Torah. If you live by the pshat of the Torah – like human beings do – you can appreciate even the deeper levels.

The angels, who do not live by the Torah, cannot change their appreciation level.

As we take a step back from that Gemara, let us look to Simchat Torah, when we essentially celebrate the many different levels of understanding and appreciating the Torah.

The Vilna Gaon suggests a fascinating idea. דָּמַע can mean tears, but it could also come from the word מִדּוֹמֵעַ, mixed up. The Ramban tells us that on a deeper level, the entire Torah spells out the names of G-d. When Moshe Rabbeinu received the Torah from G-d, he received it in a decoded fashion. It didn’t spell out the names of G-d anymore. The Torah was spelled out in a way mere mortals could understand. The Vilna Gaon suggests that the last eight verses of the Torah were given to Moshe as a mixture – in its pristine, original, coded and ‘mixed-up’ state. It did not say וַיָּמָת שָׁם מֹשֶׁה (and Moshe died there). It said the name of G-d on a hidden, deeper level. After Moshe died, G-d decoded it for Yehoshua bin Nun to spell out the exact verses.

As we celebrate Simchat Torah, the end of the festive cycle, both of the Yamim Noraim and the Shalosh Regalim, let us recognize the unique gift of Torah. Let us try to live it on a pshat level and as we grow level by level, may we be zoche to appreciate it even more and plunge the Divine depths of its wisdom.

All Wrapped Up in Mitzvot

(The song of Ha’azinu).

In this crazy-busy world of ours – forget about so-called “time-saving” devices, we’re busier now than our previous generations ever were! – we struggle to find a “safe space” (sorry for using those overused buzz-words) to just be calm and peaceful. A place to let our minds roam free as we pause and think – just plain think – about the magnificent, multi-dimensional world around us, our place in it, and G-d.

I once asked Rav Shlomo Carlebach – a man who was perpetually on the move and surrounded by fans and friends – where he goes when he wants “private time.” Where is his “escape room” where he can be alone with his thoughts? He pondered for a moment and said, “My one and only refuge from this all-too invasive and intrusive world is when I am completely wrapped up in my tallit!”

The tallit is one of four mitzvot that completely surround us from all sides so that, in a sense, we are “swallowed up” by the mitzvah. There is the mikvah too, of course, in which we immerse our whole body, and the sukkah, which also totally envelops us, and is the closest thing we can experience to the Ananei Kavod, the Clouds of Glory, the impenetrable, Heavenly wall that kept Bnei Yisrael safe in the desert.

In my sukkah, I am the Prince of my Castle (G-d, of course, remains the King!). Cozy (I prefer that to small) and constructed by our own hands, we can sit in the great outdoors, under the stars, and contemplate nature, escaping from the rush-rush-rush of ‘normal’ everyday existence. The decibel level has dropped, the spiritual level has risen, and somehow – despite its temporary structure – I feel safe there. I feel that G-d is squeezed right in here with me.

The fourth mitzvah in which we can be completely immersed is living in Eretz Yisrael. The moment we fulfill this glorious, foundational commandment and come to Israel, its Kedusha encircles us as if G-d is whispering, “You are home. You are safe in your Sukkat Shalom!”

Ironically, the sukkah was once a symbol of our national homelessness, as we moved from place to place through the desert on our epic journey to the Holy Land. We quickly assembled and disassembled our makeshift quarters, and headed to the next stop on the map, wandering and wondering when that long voyage would come to an end. Historically, it would continue for a long, long time throughout the Diaspora.

But now we are home, finally and forever. Wrapped in my tallit, sitting comfortably in my sukkah in the re-few-ve-nated State of Israel, I can close my eyes as the mitzvot wash over me and I rhetorically ask, “Could it get any better than this?”

What is Special about Simcha on Sukkot?

While two of the three pilgrimage holidays have a special and distinctive theme, Sukkot, seemingly, does not. Pesach’s is cherut (freedom) and Shavuot’s is Matan Torah (the giving of the Torah), each of which defines the holiday and articulates their distinctiveness. Yet Sukkot’s theme is simcha (happiness), which is an element also found on the other holidays. Why does Sukkot not receive its own unique motif?

Perhaps one may suggest that Sukkot has quantitatively more simcha. Although there is nothing unique to Sukkot, it does have more simcha than the other holidays. As the Rambam says, Sukkot has “excess happiness” (Lulav 8:12).

Alternatively, the simcha on Sukkot could be qualitatively different from the simcha on the other holidays. In other words, there are two models of simcha. One is the classic model, contained within Pesach, Shavuot and Sukkot, and the other is a singular model unique to Sukkot, similar to the way cherut characterizes Pesach and Matan Torah Shavuot.

What are these two models? Perhaps examining the different halachot of each can help us develop a theory to explain Sukkot’s ‘simchatic’ uniqueness.

How does one fulfill the mitzvah of simcha on Jewish holidays? For men, it’s drinking wine and eating meat; for women, it’s buying new clothing, etc. Each person should be involved with what they themselves enjoy (Pesachim 109a). The goal seems to be to increase people’s happiness through engaging in activities that give them joy.

By contrast, the simcha of Sukkot is accomplished differently. Taking the lulav in the Beit HaMikdash is described by the Torah as ושמחתם, and be happy (Vayikra 23:40). Moreover, the Simchat Beit HaShoeva (Sukkot water-drawing festival) took place in the Beit HaMikdash as well.

The Sefer HaChinuch (Mitzvah 324) claims that this time of year is a time when people are naturally happy. After all, it’s the harvest season, when farmers rejoice with the fruits of a year’s hard work. Furthermore, being spiritually cleansed after Yom Kippur adds to that feeling of joy.

The goal of Sukkot is to take that happiness and channel it towards G-d, wherever we are. We raise a lulav in all locations on the first day, and specifically in the Beit HaMikdash, where we raise it on all seven days (on a Biblical level). The arba minim, plants that embody the successful harvest, are used in religious practice – to serve G-d.

While the goal of the classic simcha (the one existent in all three holidays), is to generate personal and national happiness and rejoice in expansive fashion, Sukkot’s simcha is fundamentally different. Because the chag itself carries a preexisting simcha, the Torah aims at now raising that simcha to a higher level and focusing it towards G-d.

We express our innate happiness in an appropriate spiritual way, through sincere religious experience.

This lesson is not just important for Sukkot, but for life in general. One should direct and elevate one’s natural emotions and feelings in a way that can better serve G-d and bring us closer to Him. And that, in turn, leads to even greater simcha.

Hoshanot are the special prayers recited each day of Sukkot while holding the lulav and etrog. The name comes from the refrain of והושע נא, meaning “please save.” The Mishnah (Sukkah 4:5) describes how on each day of Sukkot, the kohanim would lead the people in a circle around the mizbeach reciting והושע נא and on the seventh day of Sukkot – Hoshanah Rabbah – they would circle seven times. The Midrash describes how we emulate this ceremony as a sign we have emerged victorious from our judgment on Yom Kippur, just five days earlier.

The hoshanot were composed by the great liturgical poet Rabbi Elazar HaKalir and are, for the most part, arranged according to the aleph-bet. Each day, one hoshanah is read with seven being read on Hoshanah Rabbah. Each hoshanah has its own theme. Unlike most prayers, the order of the hoshanah varies depending on what day of the week Sukkot begins. This year, since Sukkot begins on Shabbat, the order is as follows:

אום נצוּרָה – This hoshanah is recited on Shabbat and its theme is Shabbat – the obligations to remember and to keep Shabbat, the 2,000-cubit Shabbat boundary, the special Shabbat food and clothes, two loaves of bread at each meal, and more. (On Shabbat, we do not carry a lulav and etrog or circle the bimah.)

לְמַעַן אֲמִיתָךְ – This hoshanah refers to G-d’s various ‘traits’ – truth, greatness, splendor, kindness, goodness, unity, power, etc. It also mentions His covenant and the Beit HaMikdash which, while not traits, are still relevant to the holiday.

אֶעֱרֹךְ שׁוּעִי – The theme of this hoshanah is that we should arrange our prayers in advance, rather than wait till times of trouble. This prayer references the recently-completed Yamim Noraim.

אֶבֶן שְׁתִיָּה – This hoshanah mentions Yerushalayim in general and the Beit HaMikdash in particular – the foundation stone, the threshing floor purchased for the land upon which to build the Beit HaMikdash, the trees imported from Lebanon to make panels, etc. Salem refers to the name of Yerushalayim until the times of Avraham Avinu, while Zion is the Temple Mount.
 Salvation is the theme here. It lauds Torah scholars, who master the secrets of the Torah and all the details of the law, and turn to G-d to beseech Him to redeem us.

This hoshanah discusses G-d as our savior – only He has the ability to provide us with sufficient crops and rain.

There is an additional hoshanah not recited during Sukkot this year, but traditionally read on Hoshanah Rabbah:

The nation of Israel, is compared to a wall, the sun, a palm tree, and more.

On Hoshanah Rabbah, we recite seven hoshanot, including:

• לעני ענמנה
• אב שניתה
• אם אני חומה
• אדונינו המושיע
• למאן מאיתן

In addition, there are three special hoshanot for Hoshanah Rabbah:

Man is compared to various things, ranging from a tapestry to animals.

This discusses the curses Adam brought upon the world through his sin.

The deeds of our righteous forebears with a unifying theme of fire.
On the first day, you shall take the product of hadar trees, branches of palm trees, boughs of leafy trees and willows of the brook...” (Vayikra 23:40)

It is interesting to note that despite the Biblical origin of the commandment, we don’t use the words found in the verse. Let’s look at how the words have changed.

The verse says we should “take” the Four Species, using the verb נָּלַךְ. However, the blessing we say is לָקַח, using the verb נָלַךְ. Why did the Rabbis change the verb?

The linguist Yechezkel Kutscher offers the following answer (which he heard from a high school student of his, who we now know as the famous Rabbi Mordechai Breuer): while in Biblical Hebrew זה meant “to take,” by the time the Rabbis coined the blessing, the verb meant only “to buy.” And the halacha is that one need not buy the lulav – it can come from hefker (i.e. have no previous owner) or be received as a gift. So נָלַךְ was substituted, which only meant “taking.”

The first species mentioned is פְּרִי עֵץ הָדָר, which we today call an etrog. The word etrog is of Persian origin, where it was known as turung. A related word in Persian is naranga, meaning “fragrant fruit.” This word eventually made its way to English as the word “orange.” The original form of the word is hinted at in a story in Kiddushin 70a, describing a dialogue between Rav Nachman and Rav Yehuda. Rav Nachman insisted on using fancier words, instead of the more commonly used ones. A number of examples of such speech are given. In one case, Rav Nachman used the word etronga. Rav Yehuda said calling it an etronga is a sign of snobbery, and it should be called either etrog or the Aramaic etroga. While the use of etrog is universal today, Rav Nachman’s etroga was closer to the Persian turung.

The second species listed is פְּרִי כַּפֹּת תְּמָרִים – “branches of palm trees.” We refer to the palm branch with the post-biblical word lulav. In Rabbinic Hebrew, lulav can also mean the more general “shoots, sprouts,” and derives from the root לַבְלַב as in Yoma 81b, where it says “the grapevine shoots [lulavim] sprouted [livlevu].” The root is parallel to the Biblical יָרָה, both meaning “to blossom.” Both of these roots are related to words meaning “to shine, to burn” (לָקַח). Since the blossoming of a plant radiates like the shine of a fire.

The third species is the “boughs of leafy trees.” We refer to this species as etroga. Unlike the previous two species, hadas is a Biblical word, appearing in the books of Yeshayahu, Zechariah, and Nechemiah. The verse in Nechemiah is interesting because it mentions both etz avot and hadas. Ezra tells the people to study the Torah, and the people find the laws of Sukkot. They then order that throughout the Land everyone must...

... go out to the mountains and bring leafy branches of olive trees, pine trees, myrtles [hadas], palms and [other] leafy trees [etz avot] to make booths, as it is written” (Nechemiah 8:15).

The Rabbis say that these are referring to two different kinds of myrtle branches. The hadas mentioned in this verse is referring to a “wild” type of myrtle, which is appropriate for the roof of the sukkah, and the etz avot is our hadas, which is used for the Four Species.

The fourth species mentioned is the “willows of the brook.” The Talmud (Sukkah 33b) says while the verse is referring to willows that grow by the brook, any willow branches are acceptable for fulfilling the commandment. The word appears five times in the Bible, always in the plural form – aravim. The singular arava appears in the Mishnah, which also refers to the plural as aravot (as we do today). Why not the Biblical aravim?

This may be part of a trend where words that appeared in Biblical Hebrew with the suffix -im, have the suffix -ot in Rabbinic Hebrew.

1 In the Jerusalem Talmud, Gittin 12a, the word turung itself is used for etrog.
2 See Bereshit 40:10 and Targum Onkelos on that verse.
3 See Sukkah 12a and 32b.

The growing crescendo – mourning and grappling with reality on 17 Tammuz and Tisha B’Av, the closeness of Elul, the stark truth of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, and then this national explosion of joy – Sukkot in Israel. A nation celebrating countrywide, with families out in their thousands at mountains, valleys and water sites.

While this year we may not be able to explore beautiful Israel landscapes, I would like to share with you my four favorite Sukkot spots, in the hope we will all be able to visit them again soon.

1. Neot Kedumim Biblical Nature Reserve. The main attraction here are the live displays of the Mishna’s range of kosher and non-kosher sukkot – e.g., super-high, low, on a boat, etc. The reserve also teaches visitors about the Four Species, the Seven Species, and how nature, Tanach and Chazal are all intertwined.

2. Ancient Shomron. This is the site of the last capital of the Israelite kingdom, where Eliyahu and Elisha faced off with kings like Achav and Omri and the remnants of Achav’s palace are clearly visible. The Maccabees beat the Greek army here, and Herod later developed Sebastia. The army safeguards the roads and site so the public can visit.

3. Ancient Shiloh. The site of the Mishkan (before it was moved to Yerushalayim) offers many craft activities, rides and nearby springs. The amazing archaeological section boasts several multimedia presentations and new discoveries. The visitors center stocks refreshments, local crafts including musical instruments and jewelry, wines, olive oil and books. Ancient Shiloh is an enchanting and engaging experience for the whole family.

The Benjami region, with many springs, open nature parks and Biblical and historical landmarks, is studded with ancient craft installations, shepherds and their cheese products and amazing hilltop views.

4. Susiya (pictured). This ancient city comes to life with crafts above and underground, and street actors. The remarkable shul on top of the hill, olive and grape presses, the streets and town built to Mishnaic specifications – because they’re from that time! And that’s not all. Go walk in the secret... In the visitors center ask to see the "old" movie, and pick up local food, cosmetic and artistic products. They also serve excellent coffee!

For those who want to explore even further, I suggest checking out Yatir and Mateh Yehuda.

While lesser-known to English speakers, the Yatir region hosts expansive forests and ancient sites such as Tel Arad, many smaller sites, and a world of fruits, wines and other local products. Last Sukkot they had hot-air ballooning and rappelling from a crane-lifted aerial porch.

The Mateh Yehuda region features the Adulam, Britannia, Begin and Rabin parks, historical sites such as Tel Azekah and Elah Fortress-Khirbet Qeiyafa, and is chock full of wineries – nearly 40 – and breweries.

Before setting out, check online for the tourism departments of regional councils and cities, Facebook, etc (and for those of you staying in, this is a great opportunity to virtually explore the wonders of Eretz Yisrael).

Those of us fortunate enough to be in Israel now will never forget 5780. As in ancient times, we pray that Diaspora Jews will join us here, thus we delay the request for rain – וְתֵן טַל וּמָטָר – until 7 Cheshvan, so you can make it home before the mighty Euphrates swells from the rain.

May we merit a healthy, sweet joyous holiday and share that joy with those who sorely need it at this time.

Barnea Levi Selavan offers live and recorded tours and lectures for communities and families.
When my wife and I moved to Jerusalem 30 years ago this summer, TV ads were for drinking milk and eating oranges, not for 40" flat TV screens and “Faada.” Shimon Peres was on the right-wing of the Labor Party. English was the country’s second language, not Russian.

Pesach and Sukkot vacations were for hiking the streams, mountains, and flower fields of the Galilee, not for shop-till-you-drop excursions in air-conditioned mega-malls or for flights out to the casinos of Greece. We danced the hora, not trance.

Zionism was considered the country’s heroic and defining ideology, not a chauvinist and politically incorrect prejudice. Draft dodgers were people who closed their front doors when the evening breeze started. “Settlement” was not a dirty word.

“Withdrawal” was a financial term (something you did with money at the bank), and disengagement meant breaking someone’s lovesick heart. Even the intellectuals were unabashedly patriotic.

The Western Wall was where Jews went to pray, not protest. The Law of Return brought Jews to Israel. The Chief Rabbinate sought to build bridges for religion with secular Israelis. The Supreme Court dealt with legal issues and left it to you and me and the Knesset to decide what is “reasonable.”

Indeed, Israel has dramatically changed in recent decades, in both encouraging and disconcerting ways. But overall, my ledger is positive and forward-looking.

Israel is nine million people strong, a poignant riposte to Hitler’s Holocaust. The birthrate is well above the Western average, and Israel remains a family-oriented society. Against many expectations, religious tradition (with unique Israeli flavors) and values-education are making healthy comebacks. 1.5 million immigrants have moved to Israel since 1990, boosting the country in every way.

According to all polls, Israelis are overwhelmingly proud and happy to live in this country, even if many are hurting now because of the corona crisis and they feel the government is not functioning well.

The economy is fundamentally healthy, and fortunately, interest rates are the lowest ever. Israeli hi-tech and biotech are benefiting billions of people around the world. And despite severe underfunding, medical care in Israeli hospitals is second to none.

Israel’s leadership ranks are no longer a White-Ashkenazi-Labor-Socialist preserve, but more representative of the diverse population. Many youths still want to serve their country in the best and most difficult military units, and their determination to fix the social-economic ills of the country is stirring.

Israel’s universities and yeshivas are first-class, with tens of thousands of students. The good L-rd has granted this country major natural gas offshore deposits, with Israel soon to become a net energy exporter. Israel is a world leader in desalination, which (along with this past winter’s abundant rains) has largely solved the country’s water problems.

In the grand strategic perspective, the regional security architecture is moving in directions that strengthen this country, where Israel is a linchpin of stability for the West and an ally for the Arabs in combating radical Islam. Only Iran and Turkey threaten Israel, and their comeuppance is coming. Israel’s diplomatic horizons have never been broader. The American Embassy is finally in Jerusalem!

On a personal level, we arrived in Israel 30 years ago with one baby daughter. Since then, my wife and I have been blessed with five more kids (born in Jerusalem!), several sons-in-law and a daughter-in-law, and beautiful grandchildren. Almost all have studied in yeshiva and graduated university, including PhD and MBA studies, and even post-doctoral fellowships. Three have been senior IDF officers, two are front-line combat medics. They are proud of their long periods of service in defense of Israel.

In retrospect, moving to Israel was one of the best decisions we ever made. We thank G-d for accompanying us along the way. We feel fortunate to be part of a meta-historic, grand drama of Jewish national renewal and redemption. The next 30 years can only be even better.

"You have less than 72 hours to pack the equipment, get your visas and passports in order and fly to California. They need our help."

This was a first for Israel. The first time the small country had sent a firefighting delegation to help its powerful ally, the USA, fight fires on American soil.

10 officers and firefighters from Israel’s Fire and Rescue Services, rescue and forest fire experts, and a Foreign Ministry representative, recently returned to Israel from Sacramento, California, where they assisted local forces in battling a wave of wildfires sweeping through the area.

Since the beginning of the year, there have been nearly 7,900 wildfires in California, burning over 3.3 million acres. Since August 15, when California's fires increased, there have been 25 fatalities and over 4,200 structures destroyed. With no significant precipitation in sight, California remains dry and ripe for wildfires.

Straight into the fires they went, after quickly learning procedure and strategy from the Cal-Fire (California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection) team. They gathered all their equipment and joined the battle. Due to COVID-19, the Israeli delegation joined a capsule of Cal-Fire firefighters and they worked side by side in 24-hour shifts over the next 12 days.

“We really felt the importance of our Jewish identity in California,” said Edgar Blum, one of the Israeli firefighters. “The Jewish Agency and the consulate ensured we had kosher food, we recited kiddush on Friday night and met with the Jewish mayor of Sacramento, who thanked us for our efforts. It was certainly a proud-to-be-Jewish/proud-to-be-Israeli moment.”

Many of the firefighters left families and young children at home to make this life-saving, property-saving trip. Not only were they putting their lives in danger and away from home for two weeks, they knew that upon their return, they would also have to spend another two weeks in mandatory quarantine. And not just any two weeks, but two weeks of chagim. “Now that all of Israel is in lockdown, it’s like they’re joining us in support, so that makes it feel a bit easier,” Blum added.

“While we played just a small role in saving forest lands in Sacramento, it was extremely heartwarming to see firefighters from all around the world – especially Israel and the USA – joining forces and working together to save lives, forests and property. To see the humanity in helping those who needed to be relocated from their homes. This is what people are meant to do. Our most important work is coming together and helping each other.”

Rav Yehuda Leib HaKohen Maimon (born Fishman, 1875-1962) was born in Bessarabia, then part of the Russian Empire. Rav Maimon studied in Lithuanian yeshivot and after receiving semicha from Rav Yechiel Mechel Epstein, author of the Aruch HaShulchan, he served as maggid in Marculesti and then as Rabbi of Ungeni (1905-13). He became active in the Chibbat Tzion movement, for whom he wrote passionate pro-aliyah material and, after meeting Rav Isaac Jacob Reines (1900), the founder of Mizrachi, he took an active part in Mizrachi’s founding conference in Vilna (1902) and in its first world conference in Pressburg, Bratislava.

After making aliya (1913), Rav Maimon was among the founders of Mizrachi’s broad educational network in Eretz Yisrael. Imprisoned by the Turkish authorities at the outbreak of World War I and condemned to death, he was ultimately freed due to active intervention by Jewish American leaders. He traveled to the United States, where he helped organize and strengthen Mizrachi and, after returning to Eretz Yisrael on the first ship to reach its shores after World War I, he and Rav Kook established the institution of the Chief Rabbinate. In 1936, he founded Mossad HaRav Kook, which still publishes religious books. As Chairman of the Jewish Agency Executive, he was interned by the British on “Black Saturday” in June 1946.

He served as Israel’s first Minister of Religion; helped draft Israel’s Declaration of Independence and was one of its signatories, and played a pivotal role in promoting Judaism in the new Jewish State. A polymath and prolific author, he was awarded the Israel Prize for his contribution to rabbinic literature (1958).

Rav Maimon was appointed Minister of Religion and Minister in Charge of War Casualties in both the provisional government and the First Knesset. Elected to the first Knesset in 1949 as a member of the United Religious Front (an alliance of Agudat Yisrael, Poalei Agudat Yisrael, Mizrachi and HaPoel HaMizrachi), he retained his ministerial role in the first and second governments, resigned from the Israeli cabinet over a dispute with Ben-Gurion, ceased his political activities after the death of his wife in 1957 and then devoted himself entirely to literary work.

Rav Maimon played what was unquestionably the dominant role in promoting Judaism in the founding of the new Jewish State and in its nascent governmental institutions, particularly through his remarkable friendship with Ben-Gurion, who held him in the highest regard.

He was instrumental in ensuring that all government institutions, including the army, serve only kosher food, in promoting public Shabbat observance (including by government officials), and in convincing Ben-Gurion to vest the Chief Rabbinate with authority over marriage and divorce matters. He is also credited with the wide acceptance amongst Zionist halachic authorities of reciting Hallel on Yom HaAtzmaut.
The sukkah we live in during Sukkot is by definition a temporary dwelling. The Sages ruled that a very tall structure, over 10 meters high, is invalid as a sukkah because it is a permanent structure. On the other hand, an exposed hut consisting of only two walls and a handbreadth for the third is perfectly acceptable. This rickety booth is our protective fortress. As King David said, “You protect them in a sukkah from the strife of tongues” (Tehillim 31:21). Why should such a flimsy structure be a paradigm of protection and safety?

The Sukkot of the Great Assembly

To better understand the metaphor of the sukkah, we should examine a remarkable Talmudic passage. In Nechemiah 8:17, it states that the Jewish people had not dwelt in sukkot from the time of Yehoshua until the mitzvah was reinstated after their return from the Babylonian exile. How could this mitzvah have been neglected for so many centuries?

The Talmud (Arachin 32b) explains that the Jewish people always performed the mitzvah of dwelling in a sukkah. However, the sukkah erected by the Great Assembly in the time of Nehemiah were special sukkot, possessing a protective quality that had not existed since the days of Yehoshua bin Nun. According to the Talmud, these were not even physical sukkot, but rather a unique spiritual act of Ezra and the Great Assembly: “They prayed and abolished the passion for idolatry, and this merit protected them like a sukkah.”

This rickety booth is our protective fortress. As King David said, “You protect them in a sukkah from the strife of tongues” (Tehillim 31:21). Why should such a flimsy structure be a paradigm of protection and safety?

The Ultimate Fortress

Clearly, the protective aspect of the sukkah is of a spiritual nature. The eternal truth is that the sukkah — purposely defined as a structure so flimsy it cannot even be called a proper dwelling — is a fortress that protects us from all adversaries and foes. What is it that transforms the exposed sukkah into a shelter and stronghold? Certainly not any of its physical properties. Rather, its source of inner strength is none other than G-d’s word. The sukkah protects us by virtue of the Torah law that declares this structure to be our shelter during the holiday of Sukkot.

This is an important message for all times, especially in our generation. We need great courage to return to the Land of our fathers and rebuild our national home. Where can we find the moral and spiritual resolve to withstand the challenges of those who oppose our return and deny our right to a homeland in Eretz Yisrael? Like the sukkah dwelling, our national home is based on the spiritual strength of G-d’s eternal word. The most advanced weapons may be able to penetrate the thickest walls, but they cannot prevail over the stronghold of G-d’s word.

This is our fortress, our ultimate shelter of security. G-d’s eternal promise that the Jewish people will return to their Land and the House of Israel will be built once again.

The protective sukkah of the Great Assembly was the merit provided by their spiritual efforts to abolish the desire for idolatry. Similarly, our right to the Land of Israel is based not on our military prowess but on the moral strength of our eternal covenant with G-d and the merit of the Torah’s mitzvot.

Beautifying the Law

However, we should not be satisfied with keeping only the minimum requirements of Torah law. The Sages taught that Jerusalem was destroyed because the judges ruled according to the strict letter of the law. They failed to take into account the spirit of the law and seek a ruling both just and compassionate — lifnim mishurat ha-din (Baba Metzia 30b).

The mitzvah of sukkah is based on Divine law, but there is an ancient custom to adorn the sukkah with decorated fabrics, fruits, and grains (Sukkah 10a). We should similarly seek to “adorn” the Torah law. We should go beyond minimum requirements and aspire to the highest level of G-d’s word, in its purest ethical form. Then we will merit that “David’s fallen sukkah” (Amos 9:11), the prophet’s metaphor for Jewish sovereignty, will rise again, speedily in our days.

THE ECHO OF THE SUKKAH

Erev Sukkot 1997. 3 pm. Moise Amsalem of Montreal hears a knock on the door. It’s a court clerk with a summons for urgent legal proceedings. The Building Committee had issued a complaint against Moise, demanding he immediately dismantles the sukkah he just built on his balcony.

The residents, many of whom were Muslims, argued that the building’s constitution forbade such a structure and that it damages the building’s esthetic appearance and lowers the value of the apartments.

So a few hours before chag, Moise finds himself in court. The judge on duty seemingly understood what was happening and postponed the case for a few days, which of course made the whole thing redundant. Moise took down his sukkah at the end of the chag and case closed.

Or so he thought. The next year, Moise’s neighbors issued a lawsuit well before Sukkot, and the case went through a number of courts before ending up in the Canadian Supreme Court. There, in 2004, the judges ruled that Amsalem’s religious freedom overrode his neighbor’s objections, and allowed him to build a sukkah on his own balcony. Interestingly, the judges noted that the temporary structure is only up for one week a year, it is not really a nuisance and neither does it lower the value of the apartments.

Indeed, the sukkah is transient in essence, a דִּירַת עֲרַאי, a temporary dwelling. And this is also the spiritual message of the chag itself.

Sukkot is חַג הָאָסִיף, the time when the farmers gather in their produce. Such a time is naturally accompanied by a sense of joy and satisfaction. After a whole year of hard work, the farmer finally sees blessing in his efforts. He can spend time at home now and literally enjoy the fruits of his labors. It is precisely at this time the Torah teaches us to leave our beautiful homes for a week and live in a shaky shack.

Because stability, abundance and security are only an illusion.

We are all mortal. Anything we build, anything we obtain or achieve, is all transient and temporary.

A father asked his son what he wanted to be when he grew up. “A mega-star,” said the boy. Among all the dreams a person can have, this is perhaps the most pathetic. However, one could say, perhaps, that this dream is a weird variation of the ancient human dream of immortality.

Even if we all die someday; even if our stay here is temporary, surely our name and fame will remain for eternity?

Well no. I was once asked in an interview how I want to be remembered in 100 years’ time. I said no-one would remember me in 100 years’ time, apart from my great-grandchildren perhaps, if I manage to be a particularly good human being.

Even if we become celebrities or mega-stars for a moment, our names and fame will disappear like a dream in the night. In ancient Rome, when a victorious general marched proudly through the city streets, a slave would march beside him and whisper in his ear: “Remember death... Thus passes worldly glory.”

This is what Kohelet teaches us too. The King of Jerusalem repeatedly tells us, הַכֹּל הָבֶל – everything is vanity. It is also the breath that comes out of our mouths, which of course dissipates very quickly... as does our entire life.

“Yesterday I was but a drop of sperm,” said Marcus Aurelius, “And tomorrow I will be a pile of dust.”

Some people would learn from this that life has no value, but Kohelet’s conclusion is different: “The sum of the matter, when all is said and done, is to fear G-d and keep His commandments, for that is Man’s sole duty.” One can live a life of value, if one foregoes the pretension of living forever, and endows his or her life with meaning here and now, as our G-d taught us.

Even if our sukkah only stands for a week, we will build it with care and beauty. We will hang colored chains even if we fear – or perhaps hope – the rain will destroy them. And if necessary, like Moise Amsalem, we will fight for our right to build our temporary structure.

A person’s life, deeds and name do not last forever, but they can reverberate through eternity if we instill them with meaning and value.

Then this flash of lightning that is our life will fully illuminate for one short moment, and what more can we ask for?

No-one will remember us down here in another 100 years, but some-One in Heaven will remember us forever.

Children who are able to work for payment will experience the feeling of earning an honest wage. They worked hard – sometimes very hard – and for long hours, for a measly minimum wage. Nevertheless, they may learn that money does not grow on trees and they are likely to value the money they earned through their own efforts.

Our role is to educate them to become fond of their money and not to waste it. To encourage them to save and to spend it on worthwhile items and causes.

Too much fondness for honestly-earned money can of course lead to miserliness. A miser is someone who loves his money so much he cannot bring himself to part with it. Even if he sleeps with gold coins under his pillow, he himself is likely to live on a minimum and certainly won't give very much charity.

At the other extreme is wastefulness.

As the Rambam writes (Hilchot De’ot 1), there are those who chase money, and whatever they have is never enough, and there are those who make no effort to earn what they need. You have scrooges and savers and spendthrifts and philanthropists. Is there an ideal balance though?

How does that translate into financial education in our times? What do we want to teach our children about money?

1. That it’s a means and not an end.
2. To value money earned through hard work and honesty.
3. Not to be too miserly or wasteful, to be wary of spending money in vain and to save and happily spend whenever the need arises.

However, what does “whenever the need arises” mean? What need? Whose need? Who decides what’s needed and what’s not?

I suggest the answer is a priority list. What’s more important in life and what’s less important? For example, the relationship between games and books, between cognitive skills games and trendy, fashionable pastimes, and when is there room for chesed and tzedaka. From the moment a child has his or her own money, one should educate them to give ma’aser kesafim (a tenth of their earnings) to charity.

Before children earn their first money, they largely receive it as a gift. Without parental intervention, they could place little value on money because it’s so easy to come by.

That’s why giving pocket money without an educational context can be very dangerous. Even those parents who give their child a few dollars to “go buy yourself a treat,” are risking their youngsters placing little value on money, demanding more, or developing negative and self-destructive attitudes to cash.

In my opinion, our educational function is not solely to lay down the rules. Sure that’s one side of the coin (pun intended), but the other is our own personal example. How do we treat our money?

For example, if we tend to express our approval of the wealthy, with a touch of not-so-hidden envy, we are transmitting a strong message that accumulating money is an ideal. Or if we buy gadgets and products because everyone else is buying them – and the neighbors have just bought one too – we are exemplifying the ideal that social status is a priority value and one can buy it through material goods. Or the children see us succumb to social pressure. And if parents fight with their child on every cent he or she asks for, even when it’s justified, they are educating towards stinginess.

If Mom and Dad are always arguing about money, or bemoaning their lot and saying “we can’t afford it” or are just never happy with what they have, the children absorb all that and could conclude that they just got dealt a bad deal and life sucks.

These are of course negative examples. Act in the opposite way around money and your children will learn how to treat it in a healthy, positive, grateful and generous way.

In short, be thoughtful of how you are behaving and thinking about money, and consider how you want your children to relate to it. Work out the principles you want to teach them and then practice what you preach.

What’s the biggest cause of divorce today? If you were to ask a group of your friends to list the biggest cause of divorce today, you would probably get a string of answers: money, children, religion, in-laws.

Interestingly, none of them are true. While any one of these may create friction in a relationship, none of them are significant causes of divorce. The one and only leading cause of divorce today is fighting.

Now you may say, “Well, isn’t that obvious? Of course couples breaking up are going to be fighting. But it’s the issues that cause the fights. The issues are the crux of the problem.”

But this is a misunderstanding. It’s not the issues that cause fights. It’s how the couple deals with the issues. That defines their relationship. It’s not the children, or money, or religion, or in-laws causing the trouble. It’s how the couple negotiates their differences over these issues. That determines the success or the failure of the marriage.

As an example: Irreconcilable Differences

Studies show that 70% of successful, long-standing marriages have irreconcilable differences. An irreconcilable difference refers to a major life issue when he wants one thing, she wants another, and there is no possible compromise. If he has a thriving business in NYC, and for medical reasons, she needs to live in San Diego, there is no middle ground. Chicago won’t help either of them. If she wants to send the children to a chassidishe school, and he wants them brought up Litvishe, the solution isn’t for the kids to grow payot just on one side. Or if he wants to have at least a dozen kids, and she feels that four is about all she can handle, there is no solution that will satisfy both of them.

These issues never go away. They remain part and parcel of a couple’s life throughout their marriage. Yet despite having these types of differences, most couples are able to create a long-standing, harmonious union.

What’s even more eye-opening is that studies show that about a third of the issues couples fight about have no compromise position. It’s either your parents’ house for the Seder or mine. We paint the living room green or blue. Mixing the two isn’t an option. Despite these differences, many couples are able to maintain a loving happy relationship… and some aren’t.

Two mature, reasonable people can manage to figure out a way to deal with almost anything that life throws at them. Sometimes my way, sometimes yours, but we’re in this together, and we’ll figure it out. And if they can’t, there are always plenty of people who are older and wiser to guide them.

A big part of a happy marriage is realizing there are many things that won’t go the way I want. And it’s not because my spouse is mean or selfish. It’s not because he always has to have things his way. And it’s not that, “We aren’t meant for each other.” When you take two people with independent interests and values, it’s inevitable there will be differences.

The more a couple works on their bond of love and affection, the easier these things become. It’s much easier to give in to someone I have a deep regard for. If husband and wife can learn to have true regard for one another, they will be able to find a way around the issues that come up. But it still requires work, and more importantly, the understanding that “Of course, there will be differences, and naturally I will have to give in often.” That is critical for a happy marriage.

During the ride back to my hotel, I struck up a conversation with the Uber driver, who was from Pakistan, where his family remained. He asked where I was from. “Israel,” I replied. He briefly turned around and smiled.

“You’re the first person I’ve met from there!”

“I won’t be the last,” I promised him, as I imagined how this highly civilized society will react when the Chanukah vacation brings Israeli tourists by the throngs.

As he dropped me off, I said, “Do me a favor. Tell your family in Pakistan they should be next to make peace with us.” He held up his hand for me to halt my exit from the car. After a moment of apprehension, I saw he had brought up the video app on his phone. “Here, please tell them yourself!” And so I did.

Of all the unexpected twists of 2020, nothing would have been harder for me to imagine than someone telling me that my next business trip would be to Dubai... direct from Tel Aviv! At the time, I already held tickets for two March visits to the US (trips both canceled by COVID), and the United Arab Emirates showed no signs of abandoning its fidelity to the decades-old Arab boycott of Israel.

Less than two months ago, it was announced that the UAE had agreed to normalize relations with Israel, and since then, through LinkedIn requests and various introductions, I’ve had several worthwhile exchanges with Emiratis over video chat. A few weeks ago, an opportunity to travel to Dubai came about, and I leaped at it.

Never have I returned from two days abroad with a greater sense of optimism or potential. The purpose of the trip was to establish relationships as a basis for future business, and on that count, mission accomplished. But that was the least of it.

What I found was not just a hunger for commerce, but a genuine yearning for friendship between peoples. Each meeting evinced curiosity about Israel, and about Jewish practice, culture and history. That curiosity seemed to be colored by respect, and even affection at times. At moments, a strange sense of déjà vu set in — I guess, after all, we are indeed cousins. The tenor of my interaction with Emiratis was as unexpected as it was uplifting.

As with all life right now, this trip took place against the backdrop of the global COVID crisis. To gain entry into UAE, my Israeli passport was fine, but I also had to bring proof of a recent negative COVID test. In what appeared to be a highly disciplined society, the wearing of masks in closed spaces was virtually universal, and the case rate is low. This is in stark contrast to the situation in Israel, which at the time of my trip had the highest per-capita infection rate in the world. I saw many things Israel can learn from our new friends — management of the virus is certainly one of them.

My short trip was taken up mostly with meetings, but I had time for one brief excursion. With the temperature too high to make anything outdoors manageable, I took an Uber to the Dubai Mall – the world’s second-largest with over half a million square meters of retail space. Even in a world in which retail is in a tailspin and COVID remains a threat, the mall – which seemed larger than all of Tel Aviv – had a sense of vibrancy and safety. The architecture was eye-catching, the space immaculate, and it featured seemingly every major global brand under the sun. Incongruously, it also has an indoor ski slope.
Accustomed as so many of us are to enduring the cynicism and hypocrisy with which much of the world treats Israel, I am more reluctant to pass judgment on these bases than I might have been years ago. Bright-eyed idealism has a place, but to condition all relations on a Jeffersonian ideal would be impractical and counterproductive. My instinct, instead, was to build relationships with individuals based on mutual respect, and hope that over time all parties can learn lessons from one another.

The business potential of Israel-UAE relations has staggering ramifications which will become apparent very quickly. Today, commercial tickets for direct flights just weeks from now became available. However, even as I followed the enthusiasm in the press and social media in recent weeks, nothing could have prepared me for the depth and genuineness that repeated across the conversations I had. Or the gutra-clad property owner who enthused about the kosher kitchen they’d installed to accommodate future guests. (In fact, we landed back in Israel to the news that UAE is insisting its hotels make kosher food available.)

Another meeting, scheduled for an hour, extended to more than twice that length, with deep discussions on history, religion, philosophy and politics. At one point, my new friend squinted at me and sought assurance that if Joe Biden became President, he would not race to reenter the JCPOA, the so-called Iran nuclear deal which, quite clearly, looks no less dangerous to Emiratis than it does to most Israelis.

Yes, dealing with the mutual urgent threat of Iran undoubtedly helped bring us together, and is an issue on which we are compelled to cooperate. But less than 48-hours on the ground made clear to me that relations between our countries are going to be about more than shared security interests and even more than mutual economic exchange.

Leaders in Abu Dhabi, in Jerusalem and Washington who were courageous enough to pursue the Abraham Accords are worthy of universal commendation, and profound gratitude. The word ‘historic’ is loosely tossed around – this accomplishment will stand the test of time and prove to be one of the most impactful regional events of the era. One hopes it will pave the way for fruitful relations between Israel and many other countries.

The evening before I departed, I was part of a large group that gathered at a restaurant attached to a luxury hotel. Even though I did not get the full culinary experience (because I keep kosher), it would not surprise me to find the establishment on a list of the world’s best restaurants, even based solely on the level of service.

Shortly after came the most memorable moment of the visit when Ahmad with whom I was in conversation, checked his phone and I checked mine. We had both received news alerts from outlets in our respective countries. My alert read “Israel, UAE to sign deal at White House on September 15 — US officials.” We raised our mojitos (mine alcoholic, his not) to toast the moment. And history did indeed seem to be in the air.

As we approach the final quarter of 2020, the year itself has already become a punchline of infamy. But life is nothing if not paradoxical. And this week gave me hope that 2020 may also be recalled as the year the promise of peace in the Middle East at long last became a reality. Inshallah.

Milestones and smachot have looked very different in recent months. Leading up to these special occasions, many people are disappointed the event will look very different to how it looked in their dreams. And yet after the event, many have shared that it didn’t dampen their simcha at all. I believe that an ancient ritual commemorated on Sukkot can help us appreciate not just these more modest milestones, but perhaps even the quieter moments we have been experiencing in between.

The Talmud (Sukkah 51a) states: ‘whoever did not see the joyous water-drawing celebrations, never saw joy in his life.’ While there were elaborate festivities, the essence of this celebration revolved around a ceremony which involved drawing ‘from the wells of salvation’ (Isaiah 12:3) in the heart of the City of David and bringing these waters to appeal for a bountiful season of rain. While this ceremony appears strange, the question begs as to why it is the ultimate symbol of joy? Surely there are other milestones in one’s life where joy is experienced on a deeper level than the libations of the plainest liquid – water? Moreover, if libations are to be celebrated, surely there are more precious liquids such as: ‘wine that gladdens the heart of man’ or ‘oil that makes his face shine...’ (Psalms 104:15) Other liquids such as these were used many times in Temple offerings – why is the essence of joy associated with the most basic of liquids?

Life is filled with many milestones. Signposted by events such as birthdays, bar/bat mitzvahs, engagements, weddings, graduations, reunions and other festivities, we always celebrate the big moments and are excited by the irregular excitement of such events. However, if our joy is only acknowledged at these times, the humdrum regularity of the majority of life becomes but an intermission between the highlights. The oft-unnoticed periods between are where we spend most of our life and it would be sad to allow these intervals to remain out of focus. Whereas oil and wine are luxuries, water is a necessity. The former are artificial stimuli usually reserved for special occasions, while the latter is part and parcel of every liquid for every living being. Corona has brought this message into greater focus.

The celebration of water during the festival of Sukkot is the ‘extraordinarification’ of the ordinary – the celebration of the moments between the milestones, slowing down the periods in our life that we often fast-forward. Giving birth is incredible, but this pales in comparison with the potential life to be lived – we should rejoice at a wedding, but even more in the resulting marriage. Perhaps Sukkot is the ‘time of our rejoicing’ because after the inspiration of the High Holidays it celebrates the simplicity of nature through the Four Species and sukkoṭ.

This idea is highlighted in the ultimate collective celebration of the year revolving around the most elementary liquid. Thus perhaps the statement of the Mishnah that: ‘whoever did not see the joyous water-drawing celebrations, never saw joy in his life’ is to be taken literally. If one only experiences joy on the islands of happy occasions and special events, one will never experience true joy in the mundane yet miraculous ocean of life.

What is Shemini Atzeret?

The holiday of Shemini Atzeret, or Second Inoculation, is observed in the Jewish calendar on the 8th day of Sukkot. It is a day of prayer and reflection, commemorating the 8th day of creation, when God created the world in its final form. It is also a day to reflect on the end of the holiday season and the beginning of the new year.

While Shemini Atzeret is a separate holiday (e.g., in some prayers, it is described as Shemini Atzeret, not Shemini Atzerah), the 10th day of Sukkot is also observed (Shemini Atzerah). It is still included in the morning and afternoon prayers. In some communities, the 10th day of Sukkot is observed as a day of prayer and fasting. In some countries, it is also observed as a day of community service and tzedaka (charity).
